

HISTORY

OF THE

REFORMATION IN EUROPE

IN THE TIME OF CALVIN.

BY

J. H. MERLE D'AUBIGNÉ, D.D.,

AUTHOR OF THE 'HISTORY OF THE REFORMATION OF THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY,' ETC.

Les choses de petite durée ont coutume de devenir fanées, quand elles ont passé leur temps.

'Au règne de Christ, il n'y a que le nouvel homme qui soit florissant, qui ait de la vigueur, et dont il faille faire cas.'

CALVIN.

VOL. IV.

ENGLAND, GENEVA, FRANCE, GERMANY, AND ITALY.

NEW YORK:
ROBERT CARTER & BROTHERS,
No. 530 BROADWAY.
1880.

PREFACE.

This volume narrates the events of an important epoch in the Reformation of England, Switzerland, France, Germany, and Italy. From the first the author purposed to write a History of the Reformation in Europe, which he indicated in the title of his work. Some persons, misled by the last words of that title, have supposed that he intended to give a mere biography of Calvin: such was not his idea. That great divine must have his place in this history, but, however interesting the life of a man may be, and especially the life of so great a servant of God, the history of the work of God in the various parts of Christendom possesses in our opinion a greater and more permanent interest.

Deo soli gloria. Omnia hominum idola pereant!

In the year 1853, in the fifth volume of his History of the Reformation of the Sixteenth Century, the author described the commencement of the reform in England. He now resumes the subject where he had left off, namely, after the fall and death of Wolsey. The following pages were written thirteen yer diately subsequent to the publication of the fifth volume, they have since then been revised and extended The most important fact of that spoch in Great Britain is the act by which the English Church resumed its independence. It was attended by a pecuhar circumstance When Henry VIII cinancipated his people from the papal supremacy, he proclaimed bimself head of the Church And hence, of all Protestant countries, England is the one in which Church and State are most closely united. The legislators of the Anghean Church understood afterwards the danger presented by this umon, and consequently declared, in the Thirty-seventh Article (Of the Civil Magistrates), that, 'where they attributed to the kings Musty the chief government, they give not to their princes the ministering of God's word' I his did not mean that the king should not preach, such an idea did not occur to any one, but that the civil power should not take upon uself to determine the doctrines of the divine Ward

٧ì

Unhappily this precaution has not proved sufficient Not long since a question of doctrine was raised with right to the Essays and Reviews, and the case having been carried on appeal before the supreme court, the latter give its decision with right to important degmes. The Privy Council decided that the deard of the planty impiration of Scripture, of the substitution of Christ for the sinner in the surface of the cross, and of the intersectible consequences of the lost pulporation, was not contrary to the profession of fath of the Church of Lughard. When they he aid of this pulporant, the rationalists trainipled, but an immunity number of protests were made in all parts of Great Britain. While we feel the greatest respect for the persons and intentions of the members of it is judical.

committee of the Privy Council, we venture to ask whether this judgment be not subversive of the fundamental principles of the Anglican Church: may more (though in this we may be wrong), is it not a violation of the English Constitution, of which the articles of Religion form part? The fact is the more serious as it was accomplished notwithstanding the opposition (which certainly deserved to be taken into consideration) of the two chief spiritual conductors of the Church - the Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and the Archbishop of York, both members of the council. Having to describe in this volume the historical fact in which the evil originated, the anthor is of opinion that he ought to point out respectfully but frankly the evil itself. He does so with the more freedom because he believes that he is in harmony on this point with the majority of the bishops, clergy, and pious laymen of the English Church, for whom he has long felt sincere respect and affection.

But let us not fear. The ills of the Church must not prevent our acknowledging that at no time has evangelical Christianity been more widely extended than in our days. We know that the Christians of Great Britain will not only hold firm the standard of faith, but will redouble their efforts to win souls to the Gospel both at home and in the most distant comtries. And if at any time they should be compelled to make a choice—and either renounce their union with the civil power, or sacrifice the holy doctrines of the Word of God—there is not (in our opinion) one evangelical minister or layman in England who would hesitate a moment on the course he should adopt.

England requires now more than ever to study the Fathers of the Reformation in their writings, and to be animated by their spirit. There are who are led astray by strange imaginations, and who, unless precautions be taken against their errors, would overturn the glorious chariot of Christian truth, and plunge it into the abyss of superstitious Romanism or over the abrupt precipiee of meredulity On one side, scholastic doctrines (as transubstantiation for instance) are boldly professed in certain Protestant churches, monastic orders, popish rites, candles, vestments of the fourteenth century, and all the nummeries of the Middle Ages are rearied. On the other side, a rationalism, which, though it still keeps within bounds, is not the less dangerous on that occount, is attacking the inspiration of Scripture, the etenement, and other the inspiration of Seriptine, the domentia and concessential doctrines. May we be permitted to conjure all who have God's glory, the safety of the Church, and the prosperity of their country at heart, to preserve in its integrity the precious treasure of God's Word, and to learn from the men of the Reformation to repel foolish errors and a slavish yoko with one hand, and with the other the empty theorems of an incredulous philosophy.

VIII PPFPACP

I would crave permission to draw attention to a fiet of importance. A former volume has shown that the spiritual reformation of England proceeded from the Word of God, first read at Oxford and Cambridge, and then by the people. The only part which the king took in it was an opposition, which he followed out even to the stake. The present volume shows that the official reformation, the reform of abuse, proceeded from the Commons from the most notable laymen of Lingland. The king took only a passive part in this work. Thus neither the internal nor the external reform proceeded from Henry VIII. Of all the acts of the Reformation only one belong to limble belong the line of the limble belong to limble belong the limble belong to limble belong the limble belong to limble belong to limble belong the limble belong the limble belong to limble belong the limble belon benefit, and it is a great honor to the king. But eould it have lasted without the two other reforms? We much doubt it. The Reformation of England primarily came from God; but if we look at secondary eauses, it proceeded from the people, and not from the sovereign. The noble vessel of the political constitution, which had remained almost motionless for centuries, began to advance at the first breath of the Gospel. Rationalists and papists, notwithstanding all their hopes, will never deprive Great Britain of the Reformation accomplished by the Word of God; but if England were to lose the Gospel, she would at the same time lose her liberty. Coercion under the reign of popery or excesses under the reign of infidelity, would be equally fatal to it.

A distinguished writer published in 1858 an important work in which he treated of the history of England from the fall of Wolsey.* We have great pleasure in acknowledging the value of Mr. Fronde's volumes; but we do not agree with his opinions with respect to the character of Henry VIII. While we believe that he rendered great services to England as a king, we are not inclined, so far as his private character is concerned, to consider him a model prince, and his victims as criminals. We differ also from the learned historian in certain matters of detail, which have been partly indicated in our notes. But every one must bear testimony to the good use Mr. Froude has made of the original documents which he had before him, and to the talent with which the history is written, and we could not forbear rejoicing as we noticed the favorable point of view under which, in this last work of his, he considers the Reformation.

^{*} History of England from the Fall of Wolsey to the Death of Queen Elizabeth, by J. A. Froude.

After speaking of England, the author returns to the history of Geneva, and readers may perhaps compluin that he has dwelt longer upon it than is consistent with a general history of the Reformation He acknowledges that there may be some truth in the objection, and accepts his condemnation in advance But he might reply that according to the principles which determine the characteristics of the Beautiful. the liveliest interest is often excited by what takes place on the narrowest stage. Ho might add that the special character of the Genevese Reform, where political liberty and exangelical faith are seen triumpliing together, is of narticular importance to our age He might say that if he has spoken too much of Geneva, it is because he knows and loves her, and that while everybody thinks it natural for a botanist, even when taking note of the plants of the whole world, to apply lumself specially to a description of such as grow immediately around him, a Genevese ought to be permitted to make known the flowers which adorn the shores upon which he dwells, and whose perfume has extended far over the world

For this part of our work we have continued to consult the most authentic documents of the sixteenth centure, in the head of which are the Registers of the Conneil of Sate of Genera. Among the new sources that we have explored we may mention an important manuscrip in the Archaest of Berne which was placed at our disposal by M. de Sturler, Chineellor of State This folio of four hundred and tharty pages contains the minutes of the sittings of the Inquisit and C. irt of I yone, assembled to try Buil et a de la Mais increase for levely. To ask I swelling out they have jut was necessary to ome rains introduced in that document, we should have curtailed

XII PREFACE

and Germany, and the important letters lutherto unknown in our language, which are given there, appear worthy the attention of enlightened and serious milids

We conclude with Italy Wo could have wished to describe in this volume Calvin's journey to Ferrire, and even his arrival at Geneva; but the great space given to other countries did not permit us to carry on the Genevese Reformation to that period Two distinguished men, whose talents and labors we respect, M Albert Rilliet, of Geneva, and M Jules Bonnet, of Paris, have had a discussion about Calvin's transalpine expedition M Rillict's essay (Deux points obscure de la ue de Calun) was published as a pumplilut, and M Bonnet's answer (Calvin en Italie) appeared in the Reine Chretienne for 1864, p 461 sqq , and in tho Bulletin de la Someté de l'Histoire du Protestantisme Français for 1864, p 183 sqq M Rilliet demes that Calvin ever visited the city of Aosta, and M Rounce maintains that he did Data are unfortunately wanting to decide a small number of secondary points, but the important fiet of Calvin's journey through Aosta, seems beyond a doult, and when we come to this epoch in the Reformer's life, we will give such proofs - in our opinion incentestable proofs - as ought to consuce every imported mend

Before describing Calvin's residence at Perrora, the author had to narrate the movements which had been going on in Italy from the beginning of the Reformation. Being obliged to limit himself, considering the extent of his task, he had wished at first to exclude those countries in which the Reformation was crusted out, as Italy and Spain. On studying more closely the work then achieved, he could not make up its mind to pass it over in silvere. Am ng the classed icus of the books of that period which he has made use of is a copy of the works of Aonio Paleario (1552), recently presented by the Marquis Cresi, of Naples, to the library of the School of Evangelical Theology at Geneva. This volume wants thirty-two leaves (pp. 311 to 344), and at the foot of p. 310 is the following manuscript note: Quæ desunt pagellæ sublatæ fuerunt de mandato Rev. Vicarii Neap.; 'the missing pages were torn out by order of the Reverend Vicar of Naples.' This was an annoyance to the author, who wished to read those pages all the more because the inquisition had cut them out. Happily he found them in a Dutch edition belonging to Professor André Cherbuliez.

Some persons have thought that political liberty occupied too great a space in the first volume of this history; we imagined, however, that we were doing a service to the time in which we live, by showing the coexistence in Geneva of civil emancipation and evangelical reform. On the continent, there are men of education and elevated character, but strangers to the Gospel, who labor under a mistake as to the causes which separate them from Christianity. In their opinion it arises from the circumstance that the Church whose head is at Rome is hostile to the rights of the people. Many of them have said that religion might be strengthened and perpetuated by uniting with liberty. But is it not united with liberty in Switzerland, England, and the United States of America? Why should we not see everywhere, and in France particularly, as well as in the countries we have just named, religion which respects the rights of God uniting with policy which respects the rights of the people? It is not the Encyclic of Pius IX. that the Gospel claims as a companion, it is liberty. The Gospel has need of liberty, and liberty has need of the Gospel. The people who have only one or other of these two essential elements of life are sick; the people who have neither are dead,

'The greatest imaginable absurdity,' says one of the eminent philosophers and noble minds of our epoch, M. Jouffroy, 'would be the assertion that this present life is everything, and that there is nothing after it. I know of no greater in any branch of science.' Might there not, however, be another absurdity worthy of being placed by its side? The same philosopher says that, so far as regards our state after this life, 'science and philosophy have not, after two thousand years, arrived at a single accepted result.' Consequently, by the side of the absurdity which M. Jouffrey has pointed out, we confidently place another, as the second of the greatest imaginable absurdities,' namely, that which consists in believing, after two thousand years of barren labors, that there is another way besides Christianity to know and possess the life invisible and eternal. The essential fact of the history of religion and the history of the world: God manifest in the flesh, is the ray from heaven which reveals that life to ut, and procures it for us. We know what a wind of iseredulity has scattered over barren sands many noble souls who aspire to something better, and for whom Christ has opened the gates of eternity; but let us hope that their fall will be only temporary, and that many, enlightened from on high, turning their eyes away from the desert which surrounds them, and lifting them towards heaven, will exclaim: I will arise and go to my Father.

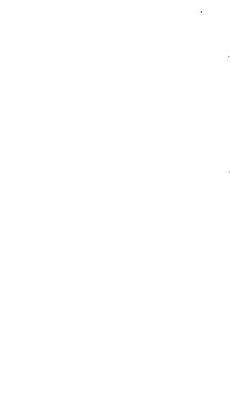

We must, as Jouffroy says, 'recommence our investigations;' but 'first of all,' he adds, 'we must confess

^{*} See the works of M. Jouffroy, and the Ilican des Deux M who for 15th March, 1865

the secret vice which has hitherto rendered all our exertions powerless.' That secret vice consists in considering the question in an intellectual and theoretical point of view only, while it is absolutely necessary to grapple with it in a practical way, and to make it an individual fact. The matter under discussion belongs to the domain of humanity, not of philosophy. It does not regard the understanding alone, but the conscience, the will, the heart, and the life. The real vice consists in our not recognizing, within us, the evil that separates us from God, and, without us, the Saviour who leads us to Him. The royal road to learn and possess life invisible and eternal is the knowledge and possession of that Son of Man, of that Son of God, who said with authority: I AM THE WAY, THE TRUTH, AND THE LIFE: NO MAN COMETH UNTO THE FATHER BUT BY ME.

MERLE D'AUBIGNÉ.

LA GRAVELINE, EAUX VIVES, GENEVA May, 1866.

¥ 21

and Germany, and the important letters lutherto unknown in our language, which are given there, appear

worthy the attention of enlightened and serious minds
We conclude with Italy We could have wished to describe in this volume Calvan's journey to l'errara, and even his arrival at Geneva, but the great space cases to other countries did not permit us to carry on the Genevese Reformation to that period Two distinguished men, whose talents and labors we respect, M Albert Rilliet, of Geneva, and M Jules Bonnet. of Paris, have had a discussion about Calvin's transalpine expedition M Rilliet's essay (Deux points obscurs de la 11e de Calvin) was published us a pumphlet, and M Bonnet a answer (Calt in en Italie) uppe ired in the Rerne Chretienne for 1864, p 161 sqq , and in the Bulletin de la Société de l'Histoire du Protestantisme Francais for 1861, p 183 sqq M Rillict demes that Calvin ever visited the city of Aosta, and Il Bonnet maintains that he did Data are unfortunately wanting to decide a small number of secondary points, but the important fact of Calsin's journes through Aosta, seems beyond a doult, and when we come to this epoch in the Reformer's life, we will give such proofs - in our of mon meentestable proofs - as ou ht to convince every impartial mind

Before describing Calsin's residence at Perrors, the author had to narrate the movements which had been gan, on in Italy from the beamming of the Rof ringtion. Being ell gel to limit limitelf, consil ring the extent of la task, le lal wished at first to excludthe ecountry in which the Ref ringtion was emploit ert, as Italy and Stain On stuleing were electy He w k there achieved I contlint out in its most to produce results of the first of the leaks of the period which he has

CONTENTS

or

THE FOURTH VOLUME.

BOOK YI.

ENGLAND BEGINS TO CAST OFF THE PAPACY.

CHAPTER I.

THE NATION AND ITS PARTIES.

(Autumn 1529.)

PAGE

Diverse Religious Tendencies — Evangelical Reformation and Legal Reformation — Creation of a mighty Protestantism — Election of a new Parliament — Alarm of the Clerical Party — The Three Parties — The Society of Christian Brethren — General Movement in London — Banquet and Conversations of Peers and Members of Parliament — Agitation among the People .

CHAPTER II.

PARLIAMENT AND ITS GRIEVANCES.

(November 1529.)

Impulse given to Political Liberty by the Reformation — Grievances put forward by the House of Commons — Exactions, Benefices, Holy-days, Imprisonments — The House of Commons defend the Evangelicals — Question of the Bishops — Their Answer — Their Proceedings in the matter of Reform . . .

(xvii)

CHAPTER III.

REFORMS.

(Exp or 1529)

Abuses pointed out and corrected—The Clergy reform in self defence—I sher accuses the Commons, who complain to the King—Subterfuge of the Bishops—Rudeness of the Commons—Suppression of Pluralities and Nou residence—These Reforms insufficient—Jup of the People, Sorrow of the Clergy—15

CHAPTER IV.

ANYE BOLETN'S FATHER REFORE THE EMPEROR AND THE POPF.

(WITTER OF 1535)

Motives of Henry VIII — Congress at Bologna — Henry sends an Finbassr — Cranmer added to the I mbassy — The Pepo's Embarrassment and Alarm — Clement grants the Figlishmen an Audience — The Pope's Foot — Threass — Wiltshire received and checked by Charles — Discontent of the Finglish — Will palies Persature — Cranmer remains

CHAPTER V.

DISCUSSIONS CONCERNING THE DIVORCE AT OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE.

(HINIER OF 1731)

Paries at CarderSec.—A row Assemble.—Marmore against the Frangelesis.—A Meeting feeture for the King.—Bowe pall to Settlement.—The A Meeting feeture.—The All the proper of the Valuer to Off of 100 post on of the grouper Members of the Valuer to—The King. Angre.—Another word Marron to Oxford.—The Voltarily decides for the Posterne 1 surplust Contract of Caplana Laurer.—The hing and the Charetheet Carders of Caplana.

CHAPTER VI.

HENRY VIII. SUPPORTED IN FRANCE AND ITALY BY THE CATHOLICS, AND BLAMED IN GERMANY BY THE PROTESTANTS.

(JANUARY TO SEPTEMBER 1530.)

PAGE

The Sorbonne deliberates on the Divorce — The French Universities sanction the Divorce — The Italian Universities do likewise — Opinion of Luther — Cranmer at Rome — The English Nobles write to the Pope — The Pope proposes that the King should have two Wives — Henry's Proclamation against Papal Bulls .

CHAPTER VII.

LATIMER AT COURT.

(JANUARY TO SEPTEMBER 1530.)

Latimer tempted by the Court; fortified by Study — Christian Individuality — Latimer desires to convert the King — Desires for the Church, Poverty, the Cross, and the Bible — He prays the King to save his own Soul — Latimer's Preaching — No Intermingling of the two Powers — Latimer's Boldness in the Cause of Morality — Priests denounce him to the King — Noble Character of the Reformers

45

CHAPTER VIII.

THE KING SEEKS AFTER TYNDALE.

(JANUARY TO MAY 1531.)

The Ivy and the Tree, or the Practice of Popery—Vaughan looks for the invisible Tyndale — Vaughan visited by a Stranger—Interview between Vaughan and Tyndale in a Field — Tyndale mistrusts the Clergy—The King's Indignation—Tyndale is touched by the royal Compassion—The King wishes to gain Fryth—Faith first, and then the Church—Henry threatens the Evangelicals with War

52

CHAPTER IX.

THE	KING	OF	E\GLAND	RECOGNIZED	AS	HEAD	0P	THE OHEDOW

(JANUARY TO MARCH 1531)

bupremacy	of th	e P	оре п	orm	us to	the S	tato — A	Il the	Clergy declared g	uilty	-(halle	nged	to re	cogniza	the roy	al Suj	remacy
Anguis
CH5810115 11	1 the	Con	170¢R	tion (f Yo	rk — D	anger of	the re	yai Supremacy										60

CHAPTER X.

SEPARATION OF THE LING AND QUEEN.

(MARCH TO JUNE 1531)

The Divorce Question agitates the Country — A Case of Poison ing — Reginald Pole — Pole's Discontent — The King's Favors — Pole's Frankness and Henry's Anger — Buds Henry submit to the Pope — Oneen Catherno leares the Palace

CHAPTER XL

THE BISHOPS PLUNDER THE CLERGE AND PERSECUTE THE PROTESTANTS.

(SEFTEMBER 1531 TO 1532.)

Stokesley proposes that the inferior Clergy shall Pay-Riot among the Prests-The Bishop's Speech-A Battle-To concluste the Clergy, Henry allows them to persecute the Protestants

CHAPTER XII.

THE MARTYRS.

(1231)

The repeatant Biliney preaches in the First's - His Friends and his Friends - Biliney put into Prison, where he meets I eth -

91

								1	AGE
Disputation and Trial	-Bil	lney co	ndem	ned to	o die -	— Th	e part	ing
Visit of his Friends -	–He i	is led	out to	Pur	iishm	ent-	- His 1	last Words - His Death	— Im	orison	nent	and i	Marty	rdom	of B	ayfield - Tewkesbury b	ound t	to the	Tree o	of Tr	uth —	- His	Death	1 —
Numerous Martyrs	•	•	•	•		•	•		77

CHAPTER XIII.

THE KING DESPOILS THE POPE AND THE CLERGY.

(MARCH TO MAY 1532.)

Character of Thomas	Cron	awell-	Al	bolitic	on of I	First-	Fruit	s 'I	(he Clergy bend before	e the	Kin	g	Two	cont	radict	ory (Oaths	_
Priestly Rumors -	Sir	Thom	as M	Iore r	esign	r — a	he t	wo E	vils
of a regal Reform	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	86

CHAPTER XIV.

LIBERTY OF INQUIRY AND PREACHING IN THE 16TH CENTURY.

(1532.)

The Perils of a prosperous Nation — Lambert and free Inquiry — Luther's Principles,—Images or the Word of God — Freedom of Preaching — St. Paul burnt by the Bishop — Latimer disgusted with the Court — More Thieves than Shepherds — A Don Quixote of Catholicism — Latimer summoned before the Primate — His Firmness — Attempt to entrap Him — His Refusal to recant — Excommunicated — Expedient of the Bishops — Latimer saved by his Conformity with Luther . . .

CHAPTER XV.

HENRY VIII. ATTACKS THE PARTISANS OF THE POPE AND OF THE REFORMATION.

(1532.)

The Franciscans preach against the King — Henry likened to Ahab — Disturbance in the Chapel — Christian Meetings in

FARS
London - Banham persecuted by More - Summoned to abjure
- The fatal has - Bambara's August - The Tragedr of Conscience - Bainham visced in his Dungton - The Bed of Roses - The Persecutor's Saucide - Fffect of the Martyrdoms
- The true Church of God

CHAPTER XVI.

THE NEW PRIMATE OF ALL ENGLAND.

(FERENARY 1522 TO MARCH 1553)

Who shall be Warham's Specesor's—Crammer at Naurmberg —Oushede's Household—Hiss Froot—Crammer matters—Is recalled to Lond-un—Refu or to return—I ollows the Emperor to Itale—Date of Hentr's Martiage with Anne Boleen—Cran mer returns to London—Strungtle between the hing and Cranmer—The Pupe has no Authority in Figliand—Appointment of Birbops wi boat the Pope—Crammer protects thrice—All Weakress is a Failt—The true Docume of the Fpiropate—
The Arecal of the Reformers —II.

CHAPTER XVII

QUEEN CATHEFINE DISCENDS FEOR THE THRONE, AND QUEEN ANNE BOLFFY ASCENDS IT

(NOTENBER 1332 TO JULY 1333)

Creent reagens that Henry woold have two Wires—His periloss. Journey to Holyma—His Factions for the Directed—him, a Marrage with Anne becomes hown—France and Frights separate—the teaching Bord—The Pape perplead—Parlia ment emmacquese Falland—Crain et's Letter to the Jong—Most and demanded by the King—Henry expressed howelf cheath—Mosting of the Feels actual Conte-Catherine Frances—Her Marrage anna fol—Queen Anne presented to the Hip file—Her Pangess through the Cit—Feeling of the new Queen—Catherine and Anne—Threats of the Pape and the King—

CHAPTER XVIII.

A REFORMER IN PRISON.

(August 1532 to May 1533.)

PAUT

163

Fryth's charming Character—He returns to England—Purgatory—Homer saves Fryth—The eating of Christ—Fryth goes over England—Tyndale's Letter to Fryth—More Hunts after Fryth—More's Ill-temper—More and Fryth—Fryth in Prison—He writes the Bulwark—Rastell converted—Fryth's Visitors in the Tower—Fryth and Petit—Cause and Effect. . . 139

CHAPTER XIX.

A REFORMER CHOOSES RATHER TO LOSE HIS LIFE THAN TO SAVE IT.

(MAY TO JULY 1533.)

CHAPTER XX.

ENGLAND SEPARATES GRADUALLY FROM THE PAPACY (1583.)

Sensation cansed by Anne's Marriage — Henry's Isolation — The Protestants reject him — Birth of Elizabeth — A new Star — English Envoys at Marseilles — Bonner and Gardiner — Prepare for a Declaration of War — The Pope's Emotion — Henry appeals to a General Conneil — The Pope's Auger — Francis I. and Clement understand one another — The Pope's Answer — Bonner's Rudeness — Henry's Proclamation against the Pope — The dividing Point

CHAPTER XXI.

PARLIAMENT ABOLISHES THE USURPATIONS OF THE POPES IN PROLING.

(JANUARY TO MARCH 1534)

P1.00

Henry desires to separate Christendom from Rome - A Buffet to the Pope - The People, not the King, want the Reformation - The Pone tries to man Henry - Cranmer presses forward -The Commons against Paral Authority - Abolition of Romish Lunctions - Parliament declares for the futh of the Scriptures - Henry condemned at Rome - The Pope's Disquietude - A ereat Dispensation

BOOK VII.

MOVEMENTS OF THE REFORMATION IN ENGLAND, AT GENEVA, AND IN FRANCE, GERMANY, AND ITALY.

CHAPTER L

THE BISHOP ESCAPES PROH GENEVA NEVER TO RETURN. (JULY 1133)

The Bishop desires to bury the Sect - Animated Conversations -Plan to transfer the Proposers - Great Animation - German Merchants and Massonneuve - He desires to rescue the Prisoners -- Constitutional Order restored -- The Bushop wishes to gre away - Hes last Night in Genera - The Flight - Deliverance - Joy and Sorrow - A Proverb

CHAPTER IL

TWO EFFORMERS AND A DOMINICAN IN GENERA.

(JULY TO DECEMBER 1523)

Arrival of Froment and Alexander - Too Chan able Solomon -Order to preach according to Serieture - bermons in the

PAGE

Houses and the Streets — The Bishop forbids the Preaching of the Gospel — Silent Answer — Invitation to a Great Papist Preacher — Arrival of Furbity — He declaims against the Reading of the Bible — Janin the Armorer — Reformers insulted; Exultation of the Priests — Furbity challenges the Lutherans to Discussion — Froment's Reply — Tumult — Froment and Alexander banished — De la Maisonneuve departs for Berne . 194

CHAPTER III.

FAREL MAISONNEUVE AND FURBITY IN GENEVA.

(DECEMBER 1533 TO JANUARY 1534.)

CHAPTER IV.

THE TOURNAMENT.

(JANUARY TO FEBRUARY 1534.)

CHAPTER V.

THE PLOT.

(JANUARY AND FEBRUARY 1534.)

Supreme Interest of History — The Bishop meditates a Coup d'Etat — Meeting of his Creatures to carry it out — The Sortie from the Palace — Two Huguenots assasinated — The Defenders of the Middle Ages — Turnult in the city — Consterration in the Council — Justice not Roting — Search at the Palace — Scenes and Discovery — The Marderers sought in the Cathedral — The South Tower — The Criminals discovered — Seizure of Documents relating to the Plot — Condemnation and Fanaticism of the Munderer — He is hanged, his Brother is saved — The Episcopal Secretary accused — The People elect a Huguenot Council

CHAPTER VI.

A FINAL EFFORT OF ROMAN-CATHOLICISM.

(FEBRUARY 10 TO MARCH 1, 1534)

The Dominican before his judges — A staggering Recantation— Dominicans and Franciscans — Father Conteiler, Superior of the Franciscans, arrives — His first Stringo — He talks white and black — Has recourse to Flattery — A Baptism at Maison neuro's — Frangelicals ask for a Church — Farel visit the Father Superior — The Pose, the Beast of the Apocalities — 243

CHAPTER VII

FAREL PREACHES IN THE GRAND AUDITORY OF THE CON-VENT AT RIVE.

(MARCH 1 TO APRIL 25, 1534)

Huguenots in the Convent of Rive — Arrival of the Crowd —
Farel preaches — Two opposite Fffects — In-spiration of God —
Joy of the Evangelicals — Farewell of the Berness — Portier's Execution — The two Preachers — The Firburgers break the Alliance — Farel's three Brothers in Prison — The Reformer's
Auxiety — Human Affections 231

CHAPTER VIII.

A BOLD PROTESTANT AT LYONS.

(1630 TO 1531)

The Reliquary — A Table d'Hâte—Who is Petrus!—Struggle with two Priests from Vienne—They abandon the Field — Maisoncure must be burnt—Danger—Arrival of Bandichon and Janin—They are sent to Prison—Formation of the Court 261

CHAPTER IX.

BAUDICHON	DE	$\mathbf{L}\mathbf{A}$	MA	tsonnet	VE.	REFORE	THE	INQUIST-
		TION	at.	corer	OF,	trons.

(Front Aran 22 to Mer 21.)

TANK

Exemination — First	Witners Emetion	nt Genera	n - The Merchants protest to	the Commiste - The	Hermera	Interroge-mory - Operation Se	cion in Front of the	l'a'are - 'I	des King shall be informe ! "	The Inquisitors desire t	io consiet B	andichon
-Allegel High To	aron egainet Heaven			269

CHAPTER X.

THE TWO WORSHIPS IN GENEVA.

(May to July 1574.)

Ŋ	for ality in the Reformation — Apportition of the Virgin — A Say-
	voyard Prosession - A second Procession onters Genera - Inc nges thrown down - The old and the mee Wor hip - The first Evangelical Pentecost - A Priest casts off the old Man - Transformation - A Knight of Rho les - Street Dances and Songs -	•
	Preaching on the Ramparts		27	7

CHAPTER XL

BOLDNESS OF TWO HEGUENOTS IN PRISON AND BEFORE THE COURT OF LYONS.

(May To June 1634.)

The New Testament in the Prison Garden—Discussion—The Procession and the Rogations—False Depositions—Janin's Depression—Search for more conclusive Evidence—Inquiries of De Simienx at Geneva—Bandichon's Pride before the Court—Put into Solitary Confinement—The Prisoner threatens his Judges—Heroic Resistance

CHAPTER XII.

SENTENCE OF DEATH.

(JULY 1534.)

Severity to Maisonnenve - Contelier's Deposition - Maisonneuvo

CHAPTER XIII.

NIGHT OF THIRTT-FIRST OF JULY AT GENEVA.

(JULY 1534)

Festival of Corpus Christi — Marriage of an Ex Priest — Discussion before the Council — Baptism — The two Powers change Parts — An Attack preparing — A Hanting Party — A Monk in the Pulpit conferes his Faults — Plan of Attack — Projects of the Enemy — Arrival of the Savoyards— Warming given by a Dauphanese — The Canons — Savoyards wait for the Signal — The Torch — Savoyards reture — The Bishop — The Hanch hack — The Conspirators file — Meditation and Vigilance — Catholics quit Genera — Title to Chizeesbup — Alarm of the Nans — Tales about the Reformers — 30

CHAPTER XIV.

AN HEROIC RESOLUTION AND A HAPPY DELIVERANCE. (AUGUST AND SEPTEMBER 1534)

The Dicabachs of Berne—Mission of Rodolph of Dicabach to France—a terrible Necessity—Resolution to destroy the Sabutas—Approaching Danger—A Refuge from Argnon—Strappado at Peny—Effects produced by the Order of Demobition—Opposition of Catholics—Maisonneine is liberated—Session at the Tour of Perse—The Prisones restored to their Families—Letter from Francis I—Furbity demanded and refused—

CHAPTER XV.

THE SUBURBS OF GFNEVA APE DEMOISHED AND THE ADVERSARIES MARK READY.

(SEPTEMBER 1534 TO JANCARY 1635)

Disorderly Lives of the Monks of St Victor—Runs and Voices in the Priory—Lamentations—Ramparts built—Asylums

HISTORY

OF THE

REFORMATION IN EUROPE

IN THE TIME OF CALVIN.

BOOK VI.

ENGLAND BEGINS TO CAST OFF THE PAPACY.

CHAPTER I.

THE NATION AND ITS PARTIES.

(Autumn 1529.)

ENGLAND, during the period of which we are about to treat, began to separate from the pope and to reform her Church. In the history of that country the fall of Wolsey divides the old times from the new.

The level of the laity was gradually rising. A certain instruction was given to the children of the poor; the universities were frequented by the upper classes, and the king was probably the most learned prince in Christendom. At the same time the clerical level was falling. The clergy had been weakened and corrupted by its triumphs, and the English, awakening with the age and opening their eyes at last, were disgusted with the pride, ignorance, and disorders of the priests.

While France, flattered by Rome calling her its eldest daughter, desired even when reforming her doctrine to preserve union with the papacy; the Anglo-Saxon race, jeal-

vol., iv.-1.

ous of then liberties, desired to form a Church at once national and independent, yet remaining faithful to the doctrines of Catholicism. Henry VIII is the personification of that tendency, which and not disappear with him, and of which it would not be difficult to discover traces even in later days.

Other elements calculated to produce a better reformation existed at that time in England. The Holy Scripture, translated, studied, circulated, and preached since the four teenth century by Wicklifft, and his disciples, became in the sixteenth century, by the publication of Erismin's Testament, and the truslations of Tyndale and Coverdale, the powerful instrument of a real evangelical revival, and cruated the scriptural reformation.

These early developments did not proceed from Calvin,—he was too young at that time, but Tyndale, Fryth, Latimer, and the other evengelists of the reign of Henry VIII., taught by the same Word as the reformer of Geneva, were his brethren and his precursors. Somewhat later, his books and his letters to Fdward VI, to the regent, to the primate, to Sir W Cecil and others, exercited an indisputable influence over the reformation of England. We find in the eletters proofs of the esteem which the most intelligent persons of the kingdom felt for that simple and strong man, whom even non protestant voices in France have declared to be 'the greatest Christian of his are'.

A religious reformation may be of two kinds internal or evangelical, external or legal. The evangelical reformation began at Oxford and Cambridge almo t at the same time as in Germany. The legal reformation was making a beganing it Westminster and Whitchall. Students, priests, and laymen, moved by in puration from on high, had inaugurated the first., Henry VIII and his purlament were about to manugurate the second, with hands occasionally somewhat rough. England began with the spiritual reformation, but the other had its motives too. Those who are charmed by the reformation of Germany sometimes affect contempt for that of England. "A king impelled by his passions was its author," they say. We have placed the scriptural part of this great transformation in the first rank; but we confess that for it to lay hold upon the people in the sixteenth century, it was necessary, as the prophet declared, that kings should be its nursing-fathers, and queens its nursing-mothers.* diverse reforms were necessary, if by the side of German cordiality, Swiss simplicity, and other characteristics, God willed to found a protestantism possessing a strong hand and an outstretched arm; if a nation was to exist which with great freedom and power should carry the Gospel to the ends of the world, special tools were required to form that robust organization, and the leaders of the people—the commons, lords, and king—were each to play their part. France had nothing like this: both princes and parliaments opposed the reform; and thence partly arises the difference between those two great nations, for France land in Calvin a mightier reformer than any of those whom England possessed. But let us not forget that we are speaking of the sixteenth eentury. Since then the work has advanced; important changes have been wrought in Christendom; political society is growing daily more distinct from religious society, and more independent; and we willingly say with Pascal, "Glorious is the state of the Church when it is supported by God alone!"

^{*} These letters will be found in Bonnet a Lettres França ses de C leon L pp 261 305 332, 345 374 Zurs & Letters, 11 pp. 70 780 &c.

Two opposing elements — the reforming liberalism of the people, and the almost absolute power of the king — combined in England to accomplish the legal reformation. In that singular island these two rival forces were often seen acting together; the liberalism of the nation gaining certain victories, the despotism of the prince gaining others; king and people agreeing to make mutual concessions. In the midst of these compromises, the little evangelical flock, which had no voice in such matters, religiously preserved the treasure entrusted to it the Word of God, truth, liberty, and Christian virtue From all these elements sprang the Church of England A strange church some call it Strange indeed, for there is none which corresponds so imperfectly in theory with the ideal of the Church, and, perhaps none whose members work out with more power and grandeur the ends for which Christ has formed his Lingdom Searcely had Henry VIII refused to go to Rome to plead his cause, when he issued writs for a new parliament (25th September, 1529) Wol ey's unpopularity had lutherto prevented its meeting now the force of circumstances constrained the king to summon it. When he was on the eve of separating from the pope, he felt the necessity of leaning on the people Liberty is always the gainer where a country performs an act of independence with regard to Rome Permi son being granted in England that the Holy Scriptures should regulate matters of religion, it was natural that permission should all o be given to the people and their repre entatives to regulate matters of state whole kingdom was astir, and the different parties became more distinct.

The pupil party was alarmed Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, already very unersy, became disturbed at sceing laymen called upon to give their ndvice on religious matters Men's minds were in a ferment in the bishop's palace, the rural par-onage, and the monk's cell. The partisans of Rome met and consulted about what was to be done, and retired from their conferences fore eeing and imagining nothing but defeat Du Bellay, at that time Bishop of Ba yonne, and afterwards of Paris, envoy from the King of Prance, and eye witness of all this ngitation, wrote to Montmorency, "I fancy that in this parliament the priests will have a terrible fright." . Ambitious cocles ristics were beginning to understand that the clerical character, latherto so favorable to their advancement in a political career, would now be an obstacle to them. "Alas!" exclaimed one of them, "we must off with our frocks." *

Such of the elergy, however, as determined to remain faithful to Rome gradually roused themselves. A prelate put himself at their head. Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, was learned, intelligent, bold, and slightly fanatical; but his eonvictions were sincere, and he was determined to sacrifice everything for the maintenance of catholicism in England. Though discontented with the path upon which his august pupil King Henry had entered, he did not despair of the future, and candidly applied to the papacy our Saviour's words,— The gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

A recent act of the king's increased Fisher's hopes. Sir Thomas More had been appointed chancellor. The Bishop of Rochester regretted, indeed, that the king had not given that office to an ecclesiastic, as was customary; but he thought to himself that a layman wholly devoted to the Church, as the new chancellor was, might possibly, in those strange times, be more useful to it than a priest. With Fisher in the Church, and More in the State (for Sir Thomas, in spite of his gentle Utopia, was more papistical and more violent than Wolsey), had the papacy anything to fear? The whole Romish party rallied round these two men, and with them prepared to fight against the Reformation.

Opposed to this hierarchical party was the political party, in whose eyes the king's will was the supreme rule. The Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, president and vice-president of the Council, Sir William Fitz-William, lord-admiral, and those who agreed with them, were opposed to the ecclesiastical domination, not from the love of true religion, but because they believed the prerogatives of the State were endangered by the ambition of the priests, or else because, seeking honor and power for themselves, they were impatient at always encountering insatiable clerks on their path.

Between these two parties a third appeared, on whom

^{* &}quot;Il nous faudra jeter le froc aux orties."- Ibid.

the bishops and nobles looked with disdain, but with whom the victory was to rest at last. In the towns and villages of England, and especially in London, were to be found many lowly men, unmated with a new life,—poor artisans, weavers, cobblers, painters, shopkeepers,—who behered in the Word of God, and had received moral liberty from it. During the day they toiled at their respective occupations, but at night they stole along some narrow lane, shipped into a court, and ascended to some upper room in which other persons had niready assembled. There they read the Seriperes and prayed. At times even during the day, they might be seen currying to well disposed citizens certain books strictly prohibited by the late cardinal. Organized under the name of "The Society of Christian Brethren," they had a central committee in London, and missionaries everywhere, who distributed the Holy Scriptures and explained their lessons in simple language. Several prests, both in the city and country, belonged to their society.

This Christian brotherhood exercised a powerful influence over the people, and was beginning to substitute the spiritual and life giving principles of the Go-pel for the legal and theoretic ideas of popery. These mois men required a moral regeneration in their bearers, and entreated them to enter, through faith in the Saviour, into an intimate relation with God without laving recour e to the mediation of the citrgy, and those who listened to them, enraptured at he mag of truth, grace, morality, liberty, and of the Word of God, took the teachings to heart. Thus began a new emi. It has been asserted that the Reformation entered highlind by a back door. Not so, it was the true door these missionaries opened, having even prior to the rupture with Rome preached the doctrine of Christ. It like the respectively of Henry's presions, the intrigues of his courtiers, the prince of line ambassadors, the skill of his ministers, the compliatance of the clergy, and the vacilitations of parliament. We, too, shall speak of these things; but above them all there was something else, something better.—the thirst exhibited in this island for the Word of God, and the internal transformation accomplished in the convictions of a great number of its inhabitants. This it was that worked such a powerful revolution in British society.

⁶ th Certain preachers who presumed to preach openly or secretly in a manner contrary to the catholic faith - Foxe, Acts by p 677

In the interval between the issuing of the writs and the meeting of parliament, the most autagonistic opinious came out. Conversation everywhere turned on present and future events, and there was a general feeling that the country was on the eve of great changes. The members of parliament who arrived in London gathered round the same table to discuss the questions of the day. The great lord- gave sumptious banquets, at which the guests talked about the almses of the Church, of the approaching session of parliament, and of what might result from it.* One would mention some striking in-tance of the avarice of the priests; another slyly called to mind the strange privilege which permitted them to commit, with impunity, certain sins which they punished severely in others. "There are, even in London, houses of ill-fame for the use of priests, monks, and canons.† And," added others, "they would force us to take such men as these for our guides to heaven." Dn Bellay, the French ambassador, a man of letters, who, although a bishop, had attached Rabelais to his person in the quality of secretary, was frequently invited to parties given by the great lords. He lent an attentive ear, and was astonished at the witty, and often very biting remarks attered by the guests against the disorders of the priests. One day a voice exclaimed, - "Since Wolsey has fallen, we must forthwith regulate the condition of the Church and of its ministers. We will seize their property." Dn Bellay, on his return home, did not fail to communicate these things to Montmorency. "I have no need," he says, "to write this strange

^{*} Le Grand, Preuves du Divorce, Du Bellay to Montmorency, p. 374.

^{† &}quot;Communis pronuba inter presbyteros, fratres, monacos et canonicos." -- Hall. Criminal Causes, p. 28.

the bi bops and nobles looked with disdain, but with whom the victory was to ret at last. In the towns and villages of England, and especially in London, were to be found army looky men, animated with a new hite,—poor artisons, weavers, cobblers, printers, shopkeepers,—who believed in the Word of God, and had received moral liberty from it. During the day they tolled at their respective occupations, but at night they stole along some narrow lane, slipped into a court, and ascended to some upper room in which other persons had already as embled. There they read the Scriptures and prajed. At times even during the day, they might be seen currying to well-disposed citizens certain books strictly prohibited by the late cardinal Organized under the name of 'The Society of Christ in Breibren,' they had a central committee in London, and missionaries everywhere, who distributed the Holy Scriptures and explained their lessons in simple language. Several priests, both in the city and country, belonged to their society

This Christian brotherhood exercised a powerful influence over the people and was beginning to substitute the spirit ual and life giving principles of the Go pel for the legal and theocratic ideas of popery. These pious men required a moral regeneration in their heavers, and entreated them to enter, through futh in the Saviour, into an intimate relation with God without having recourse to the mediation of the clergy, and those who listened to them, enriptured at he ring of truth grace, morthly, liberty, and of the Word of God, took the teachings to beart. Thus began in new crit. It has been asserted that the Reformation entired Inglind by a beck-door. Not so, it was the true door these miscionaries of ened having even prior to the rupture with Rome preached the doctrine of Christ. Idly do men speak of Henry's passions, the intrigues of his courtiers, the part le of his ambassadors, the skill of his ministers, the compliasance of the clergy, and the vacilitations of particular and the vacilitations of particular compliasance of the clergy, and the vacilitations of particular and the vacilitation and the vacilitations of particular and the vacilitations of particular and the vacilitation and the vacilitations of particular and the vacilitation and the va

^{*} Certain preachers who presumed to preach openly or secretly in a manner contrary to il e catholic faith - Foxe Acts by p 6-7

ment. We, too, shall speak of these things; but above them all there was something else, something better,—the thirst exhibited in this island for the Word of God, and the internal transformation accomplished in the convictions of a great number of its inhabitants. This it was that worked such a powerful revolution in British society.

In the interval between the issuing of the writs and the meeting of parliament, the most antagonistic opinions came out. Conversation everywhere turned on present and future events, and there was a general feeling that the country was on the eve of great changes. The members of parliament who arrived in London gathered round the same table to discuss the questions of the day. The great lords gave sumptuous banquets, at which the guests talked about the abuses of the Church, of the approaching session of parliament, and of what might result from it.* One would mention some striking instance of the avariee of the priests; another slyly called to mind the strange privilege which permitted them to commit, with impunity, eertain sins which they punished severely in others. "There are, even in London, houses of ill-fame for the use of priests, monks, and eanous.† And," added others, "they would force us to take such men as these for our guides to heaven." Du Bellay, the French ambassador, a man of letters, who, although a bishop, had attached Rabelais to his person in the quality of secretary, was frequently invited to parties given by the great lords. He lent an attentive ear, and was astonished at the witty, and often very biting remarks uttered by the guests against the disorders of the priests. One day a voice exclaimed, - "Since Wolsey has fallen, we must forthwith regulate the condition of the Church and of its ministers. We will seize their property." Du Bellay, on his return home, did not fail to communicate these things to Montmoreney. "I have no need," he says, "to write this strange language in cipher, for the noble lords utter it at open table I think they will do something to be talked about.*

^{*} Le Grand, Preuves du Divorce, Du Bellay to Montmoreney, p. 374.

^{† &}quot;Communis pronuba inter presbyteros, fratres, monacos et canonicos." -- Hall, Criminal Causes, p. 28.

The leading members of the Commons held more serious meetings with one unother. They said they had spoken enough, and that now they must act. They specified the abuses they would claim to have redressed, and prepared petitions for reform to be presented to the king.

Before long the movement descended from the sphere of the nobility to that of the people, a sphere always important, and particularly when a social revolution is in progress? Petty tradesmen and artisans spoke more energetically than the lords. They did more than speak. The apparator of the Bishop of London having entered the shop of a mercer in the ward of St. Bride, and left a summons on the counter calling upon him to pay a certain clerical tax, the indignant tradesman took up his yard measure, whereupon the officer drew his sword, and then, either from fear or an evil conscience, run away. The mercer followed him, assaulted him in the street, and broke his head. The London shop-keepers did not yet quite understand the representative system, they used their staves when they should have writted for the speeches of the members of parliament.

The king tolerated this agitation because it forwarded his purposes. There were novisers who insururted that it was diagerous to give free course to the passions of the people, and that the Frighsh, combining great physical strength with a decided character, might go too far in the way of reform, if their prince give them the rein. But Henry VIII, possessing an energetic will, thought it would be elsy for him to check the popular ebullition whenever he pleased. When Jupiter frowned, all Olympis trembled.

^{*} Je crois quals wont faire de beaux miracles —Le Grand, Preuces, p 5"6

CHAPTER II.

PARLIAMENT AND ITS GRIEVANCES.

(November 1529.)

On the morning of the 3d of November, Henry went in his barge to the palaee of Bridewell; and, having put on the magnificent robes employed on great eeremonies, and followed by the lords of his train, he proceeded to the Blackfriars church, in which the members of the new parliament had assembled. After hearing the mass of the Holy Ghost, king, lords, and commons met in parliament; when, as soon as the king had taken his seat on the throne, the new chancellor, Sir Thomas More, explained the reason of their being summoned. Thomas Audley, chancellor of the Duehy of Lancaster, was appointed speaker of the lower house.

Generally speaking, parliament confined itself to passing the resolutions of the government. The Great Charter had, indeed, been long in existence, but, until now, it had been little more than a dead letter. The Reformation gave it life. "Christ brings us out of bondage into liberty by means of the Gospel," said Calvin.* This emancipation, which was essentially spiritual, soon extended to other spheres, and gave an impulse to liberty throughout all Christendom. Even in England such an impulse was needed. Under the Plantagenets and the Tudors the constitutional machine existed, but it worked only as it was directed by the strong hand of the master. Without the Reformation, England might have slumbered long.

The impulse given by religious truth to the latent liberties of the people was felt for the first time in the parliament of 1529 The representatives shared the lively feelings of their constituents, and took their cents with the firm resolve to introduce the necessary reforms in the affairs of both Church and State Indeed, on the very first day several members pointed out the abuses of the clerical domination, and proposed to lay the desires of the people before the king.

The Commons might of their own necord have applied to the task, and, by proposing rish changes, bave given the Reform a character of violence that might have worked confusion in the State, but they preferred petitioning the king to take the nece sary measures to carry out the wishes of the nation, and accordingly a petition, re pectfully worded, but in clear and strong language, was agreed to The Reformation began in England, as in Switzerland and Germany, with personal conversions. The individual was reformed first, but it was necessary for the people to reform afterwards, and the measures requisite to success could not be taken, in the sixteenth century, without the participation of the governing powers. Freely, therefore, and nobly, a whole ration was about to express to their ruler their gries ances and wishes

On one of the first days of the session the speaker and certain members, who had been ordered to accompany hun, proceeded to the palace "lour highness," they began, of lite much discord, variance, and debate built arrien, and more and more dady is likely to increase, and ensue amongst your subjects, to the great inquientation, vexation, and breach of your peace, of which the chief cau es followingly do ensue."

This opening could not fail to excite the king's attention and the Speaker of the House of Commons began boldly to innroll the long list of the gravances of Figland "I irst, the prelates of your most excellent realm, and the elergy of the same, have in their convocations in the many and divers laws without your most royal assent, and without the assent of any of your lay subjects.

MS petition in Lecord Office Fronde, History of Fugland, 1 pp 208, 214.

- "And also many of your said subjects, and specially those that be of the poorest sort, be daily called before the said spiritual ordinaries or their commissaries, on the accusement of light and indiscreet persons, and be excommunicated and put to excessive and impostable charges.
- "The prelates suffer the priests to exact divers sums of money for the sacraments, and sometimes deny the same without the money be first paid.
- "Also the said spiritual ordinaries do daily confer and give sundry benefices unto certain young folks, calling them their nephews or kinsfolk, being in their minority and within age, not apt nor able to serve the cure of any such benefice . . . whereby the said ordinaries accumulate to themselves large sums of money, and the poor silly souls of your people perish without doetrine or any good teaching.
- "Also a great number of holydays be kept throughout this your realm, upon the which many great, abominable, and execrable vices, idle and wanton sports be used, which holydays might by your majesty be made fewer in number.
- "And also the said spiritual ordinaries commit divers of your subjects to ward, before they know either the cause of their imprisonment, or the name of their accuser." *

Thus far the Commons had confined themselves to questions that had been discussed more than once; they feared to touch upon the subject of heresy before the Defender of the Roman Faith. But there were evangelical men among their number who had been eye-witnesses of the sufferings of the reformed. At the peril, therefore, of offending the king, the Speaker boldly took up the defence of the pretended heretics.

"If heresy be ordinarily laid unto the charge of the person accused, the said ordinaries put to them such subtle interrogatories concerning the high mysteries of our faith, as are able quickly to trap a simple unlearned layman ^{*} Petition of the Commons: Froude's England, i. pp. 208-216.

And if any heresy be so confessed in word, yet never committed in thought or deed, they put the said person to make his purgetion. And if the party so accused deny the accusation, witnesses of little truth or credence are brought forth for the same, and deliver the party so accused to secular hands."

The Speaker was not satisfied with merely pointing out the disease "We most humbly beseech your Grace, in whom the only remedy resieth, of your goodness to consent, so that besides the fervent love your Highness shall thereby engender in the hearts of all your Commons towards your Grace, ye shall do the most princely feat, and show the most charatable precedent that ever did sovereign lord upon his subjects '

The king listened to the petition with his characteristic dignity, and also with a certain kindlines. He recognized the just demands in the petition of the Commons, and saw how far they would support the religious independence to which he aspired. Still, unwilling to take the part of her eay, he selected only the most crying abuses, and desired his faithful Commons to take their correction upon them selves. He then sent the petition to the bishops, requiring them to unswer the charges brought against them, and added that henceforward his consent would be necessary to give the force of law to the acts of Convocation.

This royal communication was a hunderholt to the prelates. What! the bishops the successors of the apostles, accused by the representatives of the nation, and requested by the king to justify themselves like criminals! Had the Commons of England forgotten what a priest was? These proud ecclesiastics thought only of the indelible urtures which, in their view, ordination had conferred upon them and shut their eyes to the vices of their fallible human nature. We can understand their emotion, their embar rassment and their unger. The Reformation which had made the tour of the continent was at the gates of England the king was knocking at their doors. What was to be done? they could not tell. They assembled, and read the petition again and again. The Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishops of London, Lincoln, St. Asaph, and Rochester carped at it and replied to it. They would willingly have thrown it into the fire, — the best of answers in their opinion; but the king was waiting, and the Archbishop of Canterbury was commissioned to enlighten him.

Warham did not belong to the most fanatical party; he was a prudent man, and the wish for reform had hardly taken shape in England when, being uneasy and timid, he had hastened to give a certain satisfaction to his flock by reforming abuses which he had sanctioned for thirty years.* But he was a priest, a Romish priest; he represented an inflexible hierarchy. Strengthened by the clamors of his colleagues, he resolved to utter the famous non possumus, less powerful, however, in England than in Rome.

"Sire," he said, "your Majesty's Commons reproach us

"Sire," he said, "your Majesty's Commons reproach us with uncharitable behavior. . . On the contrary, we love them with hearty affection, and have only exercised the spiritual jurisdiction of the Church upon persons infected with the pestilent poison of heresy. To have peace with such had been against the gospel of our Saviour Christ, wherein he saith, I came not to send peace, but a sword.

"Your Grace's Commons complain that the clergy daily do make laws repugnant to the statutes of your realm. We take our authority from the Scriptures of God, and shall always diligently apply to conform our statutes thereto; and we pray that your Highness will, with the assent of your people, temper your Grace's laws accordingly; whereby shall ensue a most sure and hearty conjunction and agreement.

"They accuse us of committing to prison before conviction such as be suspected of heresy. . . . Truth it is that certain apostates, friars, monks, lewd priests, bankrupt merchants, vagabonds, and idle fellows of corrupt intent ^{* &}quot;Within these ten weeks, I reformed many other things." — Froude, i. 233, Reply of the Bishops.

have embraced the abominable opinions lately spring up in Germany, and by them some have been seduced in sim plicity and ignorance Against these, if judgment has been exercised according to the laws of the Church, we be with out blame "They complain that two witneses be admitted, be they never so defuned, to vex and trouble your subjects to the peril of their lives, shames, costs, and expenses

To this we reply, the judge must esteem the quality of the witness, but in hercsy no exception is neces ary to be con sidered, if their tale be likely This is the universal law of Christendom, and bath universally done good

"They say that we give benefices to our nepbews and kinsfolk, being in young age or infants, and that we take the profit of such benefices for the time of the minority of our said kinsfolk. If it be done to our own use and profit, at is not well, but if it be bestowed to the bringing up and use of the same parties, or applied to the maintenance of God's service, we do not see but that it may be allowed ' As for the irregular lives of the priests, the prelates remarked that they were condemned by the laws of the Church, and consequently there was nothing to be said on that point Lastly, the bishops seized the opportunity of taking the offensive - "We entreat of your Grace to repress heresy This we beg of you, lowly upon our knees, so entirely as we ean

Such was the brief of Roman Catholicism in England.

Its defence would have sufficed to condemn it. * The Answer of the Ordinaries Record Office MS Fronde 1 p 225

CHAPTER III.

REFORMS.

(END OF 1529.)

The answer of the bishops was criticised in the royal residence, in the House of Commons, at the meetings of the burgesses, in the streets of the capital, and in the provinces, everywhere exciting a lively indignation. "What!" said they, "the bishops accuse the most pions and active Christians of England, — men like Bilney, Fryth, Tyndale, and Latimer, — of that idleness and irregularity of which their monks and priests are continually showing us examples. To no purpose have the Commons indisputably proved their grievances, if the bishops reply to notorious facts by putting forward their scholastic system. We condemn their practice, and they take shelter behind their theories; as if the reproach laid against them was not precisely that their lives are in opposition to their laws. 'The fault is not in the Church,' they say. But it is its ministers that we accuse."

The indignant parliament boldly took up the axe, attacked the tree, and cut off the withered and rotten branches. One bill followed another, irritating the elergy, but filling the people with joy. When the legacy dues were under discussion, one of the members drew a touching picture of the avarice and cruelty of the priests. "They have no compassion," he said. "The children of the dead should all die of hunger and go begging, rather than they would of charity give to them the silly cow which the dead man owed, if he had only one." There was a movement of indignation in the house, and they forbade the clergy to take any mortuary fees when the effects were small.

"And that is not all," said another. "The clergy

monopolize large tracts of land, and the poor are compelled to pay an extra agant price for whatever they buy a neverything in the world but preschers of God's Word and shepherds of souls. They buy and sell wool, cloth, and other merchandise, they keep tanneries and breweries

How can they attend to their spiritual duties in the midst of such occupations?  The clergy were consequently prohibited from holding large estates or carrying on the business of merchant, tanier, brewer, etc. At the same time plurality of benefices (some ignorant priests holding as many as ten or twelve) was forbidden, and residence was enforced. The Commons further emoted that any one seeking a dispensation for non-residence (even were the application made to the pope himself) should be liable to a heavy fine.

The clergy saw at last that they must reform They forbade priests from keeping shops and taverns, plying at dice or other games of chance, prissing through towns and villeges with hawks and hounds, being present at imbecoming entertainments, and spending the night in suspected houses? Convocation proceeded to enact severe penalins against these disorders, doublang them for adultery, and tripling them for incest. The larty asked how it has that the Church had writed so long before coming to this resolution, and whether these scandals had become criminal only be cause the Commons condemned them?

But the bishops who reformed the lower clergy did not intend to resign their own privileges. One dry, when a bill relating to wills was I-ud before the upper house, the Arch bishop of Canterbury and all the other prelates frowned murmured, and looked uneasily around them † They exclaimed that the Commons were herebes and schismatics,

^{*} Foxe Acts iv p 611

[†] Quod non pernoctent in locis suspects

Nullerum colloquia suspects

nullatenus l'abeant. — Wilkins Concilia, in pp 717, 722 &c t "The Archbishop of Canterbury and all the bishops began to frown and grunt. - Foxe Acts w p 612 and almost called them infidels and atheists. In all places good men required that morality should again be united with religion, and that piety should not be made to consist merely in certain ceremonies, but in the awakening of the conscience, a lively faith, and holy conduct. The bishops, not discerning that God's work was then being accomplished in the world, determined to maintain the ancient order of things at all risks.

Their efforts had some chance of success, for the House of Lords was essentially conservative. The Bishop of Rochester, a sincere but narrow-minded man, presuming on the respect inspired by his age and character, boldly came forward as the defender of the Church. "My lords," he said, "these bills have no other object than the destruction of the Church; and, if the Church goes down, all the glory of the kingdom will fall with it. Remember what happened to the Bohemians. Like them our Commons cry out,—'Down with the Church!' Whence cometh that cry? Simply from lack of faith. . . . My lords, save the country, save the Church."

This speech made the Commons very indignant. Some members thought the bishop denied that they were Christians. They sent thirty of their leading men to the king. "Sire," said the Speaker, "it is an attaint upon the honor of your Majesty to calumniate before the upper house those whom your subjects have elected. They are accused of lack of faith, that is to say, they are no better than Turks, Saracens, and heathers. Be pleased to call before you the bishop who has insulted your Commons."

The king made a gracious reply, and immediately sent one of his officers to invite the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Rochester, and six other prelates to appear before him. They came, quite uneasy as to what the prince might have to say to them. They knew that, like all the Plantagenets, Henry VIII. would not suffer his clergy to resist him. Immediately the king informed them of the complaint made by the Commons, their hearts sank, and they lost conrage They thought only how to escape the prince's anger, and the most venerated among them, I'n her, having recourse to falsehood, ascerted that, when speaking about "lack of fauth," he had not thought of the Commons of England, but of the Bohemians only. The other prelates confined this madmissible interpretation. This was a graver full than the full itself, and the unbecoming evision was a defeat to the elerical party from which they never recovered. The king allowed the excuse, but he after wards made the bishops feel the little esteem he entertained for them. As for the House of Commons, it loudly expressed the disdain aroused in them by the bishops' subterfige

One chance of safety still remained to them Mixed committees of the two houses examined the resolutions of the Commons. The peers, especially the ecclesisated peers, opposed the reform by appealing to usage "Usage" ironically observed a Gray's inn lawyer, "the usage hathever been of thickes to rob on Shooter's hill, ergo it is lawful, and ought to be kept up". This remark sorely irritated the pielates "What! our acts are compared to robberies!" But the lawyer, addressing the Archbishop of Canterbury, seriously endeavored to prove to him that the exactions of the clergy, in the matter of probates and mortuaries, were open robbery. The temporal lords gradually adopted the opinions of the Commons.

In the midst of these debates, the king did not lose sight of his own interests. Six years before, he had rused a loan among his subjects, he thought parliament ought to reheve him of this debt. This demand was opposed by the members mo t devoted to the principle of the Reformation, John Petit, in particular, the friend of Bilacy and Tyndale, sud, in parliament,—"I give the king all I lent him, but I can not give him what others have lent him." Henry was not, however, discouraged, and finally obtained the act required.

The king soon showed that he was plan ed with the Commons Two bills met with a stern opposition from the Lords, they were those abobshing pluralism and non-residence. These two customs were so convenient and advantageous that the clergy determined not to give them up. Henry, seeing that the two honses would never agree, resolved to cut the difficulty. At his desire eight members from each met one afternoon in the Star Chamber. There was an animated discussion; but the lay lords, who were in the conference, taking part with the commons, the bishops were forced to yield. The two bills passed the Lords the next day, and received the king's assent. After this triumph the king adjourned parliament in the middle of December.

The different reforms that had been carried through were important, but they were not the Reformation. Many abuses were corrected, but the doctrines remained unaltered; the power of the elergy was restricted, but the authority of Christ was not increased; the dry branches of the tree had been lopped off, but a seion calculated to bear good fruit had not been grafted on the wild stock. Had matters stopped here, we might perhaps have obtained a Church with morals less repulsive, but not with a holy doctrine and a new life. But the Reformation was not contented with more decorous forms, it required a second creation.

At the same time parliament had taken a great stride towards the revolution that was to transform the Church. A new power had taken its place in the world: the haity had triumphed over the elergy. No doubt there were upright catholies who gave their assent to the laws passed in 1529; but these laws were nevertheless a product of the Reformation. This it was that had inspired the laity with that new energy, parliament with that bold action, and given the liberties of the nation that impulse which they had wanted hitherto. The joy was great throughout the kingdom; and, while the king removed to Greenwich to keep Christmas there "with great plenty of viands, and disguisings, and interludes," the members of the Commons were welcomed in the towns and villages with public rejoicings.* In the people's eyes their representatives were like soldiers who had just gained a brilliant victory. The clergy alone, in all England, were downeast and exasperated. On returning to their residences the bishops could not conceal their anguish at the danger of the Church. The priests, who had been the first victims offered up on the altar of reform, bent their heads. But if the clergy foresaw days of mourning, the laity bailed with joy the glorions era of the liberties of the people, and of the greatness of England. The friends of the Reformation went farther still; they believed that the Gospel would work a complete change in the world, and talked, as Tyndalo informs ns, "as though the golden age would come again." †

^{*} Foxe, Acts, iv. p. 614.

CHAPTER IV.

ANNE BOLEYN'S FATHER BEFORE THE EMPEROR AND THE POPE.

(Wenter of 1530.)

BEFORE such glorious hopes could be realized, it was necessary to emancipate Great Britain from the yoke of Romish supremacy. This was the end to which all generous monks aspired; but would the king assist them?

Henry VIII. united strength of body with strength of will; both were marked on his manly form. Lively, active, eager, vehement, impatient, and voluptions,—whatever he was, he was with his whole soul. He was at first all beart for the Clurch of Rome; he went barefoot on pilgrimages, wrote against Luther, and flattered the pope. But before ong be grew tired of Rome, without desiring the Reformation. Profoundly selfish, he cared for himself alone. If the papal domination offended him, evangelical liberty annoyed him. He meant to remain master in his own house, — the only master, and master of all. Even without the divorce, Henry would possibly have separated from Rome. Rather than endure any contradiction, this singular man put to death friends and enemies, bishops and missionaries, ministers of state, and favorites — even his wives. Such was the prince whom the Reformation found King of England.

^{* &}quot;The great depleasure of spiritual persons."- Ibid.
† Tyndale's Worls, Lp. 421.

History would be injust, however, were it to maintain that passion alone urged him to action. The question of the succession to the throne had for a century filled the country with confusion and blood. This Henry could not forget. Would the struggles of the two Roses be renewed after his death, occasioning, perhaps, the destruction of an ancient monarchy? If Mary, a princess of delicate health, should die, Scotland, France, the party of the White Rose, the Duke of Suffolk, whose wife was Henry's sister, might drag the kingdom into endless wars. And even if Mary's days were prolonged, her title to the crown might be disputed, no female sovereign having as yet sat upon the throne Another train of ideas also occupied the king's mind. inquired sincercly whether his marriage with the widow of his brother was lawful. Even before its consummation, he had felt doubts about it. But even his defenders, if there are any, must acknowledge that one circumstance contributed at this time to give unusual force to these scruples. Passion impelled the king to break a holy bond; he loved another woman.

Catholic writers imagine that this guilty motive was the only one. It is a mistake, for the two former indisputably occupied Henry's mind. As for parliament and people, the king's love for Anne Boleyn affected them very little. It was the reason of state which made them regard the divorce as just and necessary.*

^{* &}quot;All indifferent and discreet persons judged that it was right and necessary."—Hall, Chronicles of England, p."784.

A congress was at that time sitting at Bologna with great pomp * On the 5th of November, Charles V having arrived from Spuin, had entered the city, attended by a magnificent suite, and followed by 20,000 soldiers. He was covered with gold, and shone with grace and majesty. The pope waited for lim in front of the church of San Petronio, scated on a throne, and wearing the triple crown. The emperor, master of Italy, which his soldiers had reduced to the last desolation; fell prostrate before the pontiff, but lately his prisoner. The union of these two monarchs, both one mies of Henry VIII, seemed destined to ruin the King of England and thwart his great affair.

And yet, not long before, an ambassador from Charles V had been received at Whitehall it was Master Eustace Chappuis, who had already discharged a mi sion to Geneval He came to solicit aid against the Turks Henry caught at the chance he imagined the moment to be favorable, and that he ought to despatch an embassy to the head of the empire and the head of the Church He sent for the Earl of Wiltshire, Anne Boleyn's father, Edward Lee, afterwards Archbishop of York, Stokesley, afterwards Bishop of London, and some others He told them that the emperor desired his alliance, and commissioned them to proceed to Italy, and explain to Charles V the serious motives that induced him to separate from Catherine "If he persists in his opposition to the divorce," continued Henry, "threaten hum, but in covert terms If the threats prove useless, tell him plainly that, in accord with my friends, I will do all I can to restore peace to my troubled conscience" He added with more culmness, - "I am resolved to fear God rather than man, and to place full reliance on comfort from the Saviour' § Was Henry sincere when he spoke thus? No

^{*} Congressus iste magna cum pomps fiet. —State Popers, vii p 209
We must not confound this congress with the one held later in this city
See antea vol ii book ii chap xxv xxvi xxix

[†] Letter from Sir H Carew to Henry VIII State Papers, vii 225 Antea, vol i ch. ix

Instruction to Willshire State Papers, vi p 230

one can doubt of his sensuality, his scholastic catholicism, and his cruel violence: — must we also believe in his hypoerisy? He was no doubt under a delusion, and deceived himself on the state of his soul.

An important member was added to the deputation. One day when the king was occupied with this affair, Thomas Craumer appeared at the door of his closet with a manuscript in his hand. Cranmer had a fine understanding, a warm heart, a character perhaps too weak, but extensive learning. Captivated by the Holy Scriptures, he desired to seek for truth nowhere else. He had suggested a new point of view to Henry VIII. "The essential thing," he said, "is to know what the Word of God teaches on the matter in question." "Show me that," exclaimed the king. Cranmer brought him his treatise, in which he proved that the Word of God is above all Imman jurisdiction, and that it forbids marriage with a brother's widow. Henry took the work in his hand, read it again and again, and praised its excellence. A bright idea occurred to him. "Are you strong enough to maintain before the Bishop of Rome the propositions laid down in this treatise?" said the king. Cranmer was timid, but convinced and devoted. "Yes," he made answer, "with God's grace, and if your Majesty commands it." "Marry, then," exclaimed Henry with delight, "I will send you." * Cranmer departed with the others in January, 1530.

While Henry's ambassadors were journeying slowly, Charles V., more exasperated than ever against the divorce, endeavored to gain the pope. Clement VII., who was a elever man, and possessed a certain kindly humor, but was at heart cunning, false, and cowardly, amused the pnissant emperor with words. When he learned that the King of England was sending an embassy to him, he gave way to the keenest sorrow. What was he to do? which way could he turn? To irritate the emperor was dangerous; to separate England from Rome would be to endure a great loss Caught hetween Charles V. and Henry VIII, he groaned aloud, he paced up and down his chamber gestur-lating, then suddenly stopping, sank into a chair and hirst into tears. Nothing succeeded with him it was, he thought, as if he had heen bewitched. What need was there for the King of England to send him an embassy? Had not Clement told Henry through the Bishop of Tarbes. "I am content the marriage should take place, provided it he without my authorization". It was of no use the pope asked him to do without the papacy, and the king would only act with it. He was more popish than the pope

^{*} Foxe, Acts viii. p. 9.

To add to his misfortunes, Charles hegan to press the pontiff more seriously, and yielding to his importantites, Clement drew up a hiref on the 7th of March, in which he commanded Henry "to receive Catherine with love, and to treat her in all things with the affection of a hushand' f But the brief was scarcely written when the arrival of the Eaglish embassy was announced. The pope in alarm immediately put the document back into his portfolio, promising himself that it would be long hefore he published it.

As soon as the English envoys had taken up their quarters at Bologan, the ambassadors of France called to pay their respects De Gramont, Bishop of Tarbes, was overflowing with politeness, especially to the Earl of Wiltshire "I have shown much honor to M de Rochford," he wrote to his master on the 28th of March "I went out to meet him I have visited him often at his lodging I have feted him, and offered him my solventations and services, telling him that such were your orders $\frac{1}{2}$ Not thus did Glement VII act the arrival of the Earl of Wiltshire and his colleagues was a cause of alarm to him Yet he must make up his mind to receive them he appointed the day and the hour for the andience

^{*} La Grand Preures p. 400

[†] Reg nam complecteddo affectione maritali tractet in omnibus *-Le Grand Preuzes, p 451

[‡] lbid p 399

Henry VIII. desired that his representatives should appear with great pomp, and accordingly the ambassador and his colleagues went to great expense with that intent.* Wiltshire entered first into the audience-hall; being father of Anne Boleyn, he had been appointed by the king as the man in all England most interested in the success of his But Henry had calculated badly: the personal interest which the earl felt in the divorce made him odious both to Charles and Clement. The pope, wearing his pontifical robes, was seated on the throne surrounded by his cardinals. The ambassadors approached, made the customary salutations, and stood before him. The pontiff, wishing to show his kindly feelings towards the envoys of the "Defender of the Faith," put out his slipper according to custom, presenting it graciously to the kisses of those proud Englishmen. The revolt was about to begin. The earl, remaining motionless, refused to kiss his holiness's slipper. But that was not all; a fine spaniel, with long silky hair, which Wiltshire had brought from England, had followed him to the episcopal palace. When the bishop of Rome put out his foot, the dog did what other dogs would have done under similar circumstances: he flew at the foot, and caught the pope by the great toe.† Clement hastily drew it back. The sublime borders on the ridiculous: the ambassadors, bursting with laughter, raised their arms and hid their faces behind their long rich sleeves. "That dog was a protestant," said a reverend father. "Whatever he was," said an Englishman, "he taught us that a pope's foot was more meet to be bitten by dogs than kissed by Christian men." The pope, recovering from his emotion, prepared to listen, and the count, regaining his seriousness, explained to the pontiff that as Holy Scripture forbade a man to marry his brother's wife, Henry VIII. required him to annul as unlawful his union with Citherine of Aragon As Clement did not seem convinced, the ambasador skilfully insinurted that the king might possibly declare himself independent of Rome, and place the British church under the direction of a patuarch "The example,' added the ambassador, "will not fail to be imitated by other Lingdoms of Christendom'

^{*&}quot; Esso Conte habi commissione far una grossa spesa." — Lettre de Joachim de Vaux, ibid. p. 409.

^{† &}quot;The spaniel took fast with his mouth the great too of the pope." — Foxe, Acts, viii. p. 9.

The agitated pope promised not to remove the suit to Rome, provided the king would give up the idea of reform ing England Then, putting on a most gracious air, he proposed to introduce the ambassador to Charles V This was giving Wiltshire the chance of receiving a harsh rebuff The earl saw it, but his duty obliging him to coafer with the emperor, he accepted the offer

The father of Aune Boleyn proceeded to an audience with the nephew of Catherine of Aragon Representatives of two women whose rwal causes agitated Turope, these two men could not meet without a collision True, the earl flattered lumself that as it was Charles's interest to detach Henry from Trancis I, that phlegmatic and politic prince would certainly not sacrifice the gravest interests of his reign for a matter of sentiment, but he was deceived The emperor received him with a calm and reserved air, but unaccompanied by any kindly demonstration. The ambas andor skilfully began with speaking of the Turkish war, then ingeniously passing to the condition of the kingdom of Fingland, he pointed out the reasons of state which rendered the divorce necessary Here Charles stopped him short "Sir Count, you are not to be trusted in this matter, you ne a party to it , let your colleagues speak" The earl replied with respectful coldness "Sire, I do not speak here as a father, but as my master a servant, and I am commis sioned to inform you that his conscience condemns a union contrary to the law of God " † He then offered Charles the immediate restitution of Cutherine's dowry The emperor

^{* &#}x27;Che l' altri regui questo imitando - Le Grand, Preuces du Dicorce p 419

t Le Grand P cures pp 401 454.

coldly replied that he would support his dunt in her rights, and then abruptly turning his back on the ambassador, refused to hear him any longer.*

Thus did Charles, who had been all his life a crafty politician, place in this matter the cause of justice above the interests of his ambition. Perhaps he might lose an important ally; it mattered not; before everything he would protect a woman unworthily treated. On this occasion we feel more sympathy for Charles than for Henry. The indignant emperor hastily quitted Bologun, on the 22d or 24th of February.

The earl hastened to his friend M. de Gramont, and, relating how he had been treated proposed that the kings of France and England should unite in the closest bonds. He added, that Henry could not accept Clement as his judge, since he had himself declared that he was ignorant of the law of God.† "England," he said, "will be quiet for three or four months. Sitting in the ballroom, she will watch the dancers, and will form her resolution according as they dance well or ill." ‡ A rule of policy that has often been followed.

Gramont was prepared to make common cause with Henry against the emperor; but, like his master, he could not make his mind to do without the pope. He strove to induce Clement to join the two kings and abandon Charles; or else—he insinuated in his turn—England would separate from the Romish Church. This was to incur the risk of losing Western Enrope, and according to incur the risk of losing Western Enrope, and according to the pope answered with much concern: "I will do what you ask." There was, however, a reserve; namely, that the steps taken overtly by the pope would absolutely decide nothing.

Clement once more received the ambas ador of Henry VIII. The earl earried with him the book wherein Cranmer proved that the pope cannot dispense any one from obeying the law of God, and presented it to the pope The latter took it and glanced over it, his looks showing that a prison could not have been more disagreeable to him than this impertment volume * The Farl of Wiltshire soon discovered that there was nothing for him to do in Italy Charles V, usually so reserved had made the bittere t remarks before his departure. His chancellor, with an air of triumph, enumerated to the English ambassador all the divines of Italy and France who were opposed to the king's wishes The pope seemed to be a puppet which the em peror moved as he liked, and the cardinals had but one idea, -that of exalting the Romish power Werried and dis gusted the earl departed for France and England with the greater portion of his colleagues Cranmer was left behind Having been seat to show Clement that Holy Scripture is above all Roman pontiffs, and speaks in a language quite opposed to that of the popes, he had asked more than once for an audience at which to discharge his mission. The wilv pontiff had replied that he would hear him at Rome, believing he was thus putting him off until the Greek calends But Clement was deceived the English doctor, determining to do his duty, refused to depart for London with the rest of the embassy, and repaired to the metropolis of Catholicism * 'A book as welcome to his Holiness as a prison - Fuller, Church

^{*} Le Grand, Preuves, pp. 401, 451.

^{† &}quot;He declared himself ignorant of that law." -State Papers, xii. p. 230.

[‡] Le Grand, Preures, pp. 401, 455.

History p 182

CHAPTER V.

DISCUSSIONS CONCERNING THE DIVORCE AT OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE.

(Winter of 1530.)

At the same time that Henry sent ambassadors to Italy to obtain the pope's consent, he invited all the universities of Christendom to declare that the question of divorce was of divine right, and that the pope had nothing to say about it. It was his opinion that the universal voice of the Church ought to decide, and not the voice of one man.

First, he attempted to canvass Cambridge, and, as he wanted a skilful man for that purpose, he applied to Wolsey's old servant, Stephen Gardiner, an intelligent, active, wily ehnrehman and a good catholic. One thing alone was superior to his catholicism,—his desire to win the king's favor. He aspired to rise like the cardinal to the summit of greatness. Henry named the chief almoner, Edward Fox, as his colleague.

Arriving at Cambridge one Saturday about noon, in the latter half of February, the royal commissioners held a conference in the evening with the vice-chancellor (Dr. Buckmaster), Dr. Edmunds, and other influential men who had resolved to go with the court. But these doctors, members of the political party, soon found themselves checked by an embarrassing support on which they had not ealculated; it was that of the friends of the Gospel. They had been convinced by the writing which Cranmer had published on the divorce. Gardiner and the members of the conference, hearing of the assistance which the evangelicals desired to give them, were annoyed at first. On the other hand, the champions of the court of Rome, alarmed at the allunce of the two parties who were opposed to them began that very night to visit college after college, leaving no stone unturned that the peri night be averted Gi diner, uneasy at their zeal, wrote to Henry VIII — 'As we assembled, they assembled, as we made friends, they made friends'* Dr Watson, Dr Tomson, and other faintical individuals at one time shouted very loudly, at another spoke in whispers? They said that Anne Boleyn was a heretic, that her marriage with Henry would hand Frighand over to Luther, and they related to those whom they desired to gun—wrote Gardiner to the ling—'many fables too tedious to repeat to your Grace' These 'fables' would not only have boiled Henry, but greatly irritated him

The vice chancellor, flattering himself that he had a ma jority, notwithstanding these clamors called a meeting of the doctor, bachelors of divinity, and masters of art, for Sunday afternoon About two hundred 1 ersons assembled, and the three parties were distinctly marked out. The most numerous and the most excited were those who beld for the pope against the Ling The evangelicals were in a minority, but were quite as decided as their adversaries, and much calmer The politicians, uneasy at seeing the friends of Latimer and Cranmer disposed to vote with them would have, however, to accept of their support, if they wished to gain the victory They resolved to seize the op portunity offered them 'Most learned senators,' said tile vice-chuncellor, 'I have called you together because the great love which the king bears you engages me to consult your wisdom' Thereupon Guidiner and Tox handed in the letter which Henry had given them and the vice-chancellor read it to the meeting In it the king set forth his hopes of seeing the doctors unaminous to do what was agreeable to him The deliberations commenced, and the question of a rupture with Rome soon began to appear di tincily beneath the question of the divorce Edmunds spoke for the king, Tomson for the pope. There was an interchange of antagonistic opinions and a disorder of ideas among many; the speakers grew warm; one voice drowned another, and the confusion became extreme.*

^{*} Burnet, Records 1

The vice-chaneellor, desirous of putting an end to the elamor, proposed referring the matter to a committee, whose decision should be regarded as that of the whole university, which was agreed to. Then, seeing more clearly that the royal cause could not succeed without the help of the evangelical party, he proposed some of its leaders - Doctors Saleot, Rcps, Crome, Shaxton, and Latimer - as members of the committee. On hearing these names, there was an explosion of murmurs in the meeting. Salcot, Abbot of St. Benet's, was particularly offensive to the doctors of the Romish party. 'We protest,' they said, 'against the presence in the committee of those who have approved of Cranmer's book, and thus declared their opinion already.' 'When any matter is talked of all over the kingdom,' answered Gardiner, 'there is not a sensible man who does not tell his friends what he thinks about it.' The whole afternoon was spent in lively altercation. The vice-chancellor, wishing to bring it to an end, said: 'Gentlemen, it is getting late, and I invite every one to take his seat, and declare his mind by a secret vote.' It was useless; no one took his seat; the confusion, reproaches, and declamations continued. At dark, the vice-chancellor adjourned the meeting until the next day. The doctors separated in great excitement, but with different feelings. While the politicians saw nothing clse to discuss but the question of the king's marriage, the evangelicals and the papists considered that the real question was this: Which shall rule in England the Reformation or Popery?

The next day, the names of the members of the committee

^{* &#}x27;Et res erat in multa confusione.' - Burnet, Records, i. p. 79, Gardiner to the king.

^{† &#}x27;To resort to his seat apart, every man's mind to be known secretly.' -- Burnet, Records, i. p. 80.

having been put to the vote, the meeting was found to be divided into two equal parties. In order to obtain a major ity Gardiner undertook to get some of his adversaries out of the way. Going up and down the Senate house, he be gan to whisper in the ears of some of the less decided, and, assume them eather with hone of fear, he presuled mon inspiring them either with hope or fear, he prevailed upon several to leave the meeting The grace was then put to the vote a third time and passed Gardiner triumphed Returning to his room, he sent the list to the Ling Sixteen of the committee, indi cated by the letter A, were favorable to his majesty 'As for the twelve others, he wrote, 'we hope to win mo t of them by good means' The committee met, and took up the royal demand They carefully examined the passages of Holy Scripture, the explanations of translators, and gave their opinion † Then followed the public discussion Gur diner was not without fear as there might be skilful a sail ants and awkward defenders, he looked out for men qualified to defend the royal cause worthily. It was a remarkable circumstance that, passing over the traditional doctors he added to the defence - of which he and Fox were the leaders - two evangeheal doctors, Salcot, Abbot of St Ben ets, and Reps He reserved to his colleague and bimself the political part of the question, but notwithstanding all his catholicism, he desired that the scriptural reasons should be placed foremost. The discussion was conducted with great thoroughness,I and the victory remained with the Ling's champions

On the 9th of March, the doctors professors, and masters having met after vespers in the priory hill, the vece-chim cellor said 'It has appeared to us as mo t certain most in accord with Holy Scripture, and most conformable to the opinions of commentators, that it is contrary to divine and natural law for a man to marry the widow of his brother 'To cause some to depart the house —Table.

t S Ser pture locorum conferentes tum etism interpretum - Burnet Records 11 p 22

t Publ cam d sputat onem matura deliberations -- Ib d.

dying ehildless.'* Thus the Seriptures were really, if not explicitly, declared by the university of Cambridge to be the supreme and only rule of Christians, and the contrary decisions of Rome were held to be not binding. The Word of God was avenged of the long contempt it had endured, and, after having been put below the pope's word, was now restored to its lawful place. In this matter Cambridge was right.

It was necessary to try Oxford next. Here the opposition was stronger, and the popish party looked forward to a victory. Longland, Bishop of Lincoln and chancellor of the university, was commissioned by Henry to undertake the matter; Doetor Bell, and afterwards Edward Fox, the chief almoner, being joined with him. The king, uneasy at the results of the negotiation, and wishing for a favorable decision at any eost, gave Longland a letter for the university, through every word of which an undisguised despotism was visible. 'We will and command you,' he said, 'that ye, not leaning to wilful and sinister opinions of your own several minds, considering that we be your sovereign liege lord, and totally giving your affections to the true overtures of divine learning in this behalf, do show and deelare your true and just learning in the said cause. . . . And we, for your so doing, shall be to you and to our university there so good and gracious a lord for the same, as ye shall perceive it well done in your well fortune to come. And in case you do not uprightly handle yourselves herein, we shall so quickly and sharply look to your unnatural misdemeanor herein, that it shall not be to your quietness and ease hereafter. . . Accommodate yourselves to the mere truth; assuring you that those who do shall be esteemed and set forth, and the contrary neglected and little set by. . . . We doubt not that your resolution shall be our high contentation and pleasure.'

This royal missive eaused a great eommotion in the uni-

0 *

^{* &#}x27;Scrutatis diligentissime Sacræ Scripturæ locis.' — Burnet, Records, iii. p. 22.

84 versity Some slavishly bent their heads, for the king spoke rod in hand Others declared themselves convinced by the political reasons, and said that Henry must have an heir whose right to the throne could not be disputed And, lastly, some were convinced that Holy Scripture was favor able to the royal cause All men of age and learning, as well as all who had either capacity or ambition, declared in favor of the divorce Nevertheless a formidable opposition soon showed itself

The younger members of the Senate were enthusiastic for Cutherine, the Church, and the pope Their theological education was imperfect, they could not go to the bottom of the question, but they judged by the heart To see a Catholic lady oppressed, to see Rome despised, inflamed their anger, and, if the elder members maintained that their view was the more reasonable, the younger ones believed theirs to be the more noble Unhappily, when the choice hes between the useful and the generous, the useful com monly triumphs Still, the young doctors were not prepared to yield They said - and they were not wrong - that re ligion and morality ought not to be sacrificed to reasons of state, or to the passions of princes. And, sceing the spectre of Reform hidden behind that of the divorce, they regarded themselves as called upon to save the Church said the royal delegates, the Bishop of Lincoln and Dr Bell, 'alas' we are in continual perplexity, and we cannot fore see with any certainty what will be the issue of this bust ne₅5 ' *

They agreed with the heads of houses that, in order to prepare the university, three public disputations should be solemnly held in the divinity schools By this means they hoped to gain time 'Such disputations,' they and, 'are a very honorable means of amusing the multitude until we are sure of the consent of the majority' † The discussions took place, and the younger masters, arranging each day

^{* &#}x27;In doubt always - State Papers 1 p 377

[&]quot; Most convenient way to enterts a the multitude - Il id

what was to be done or said, gave utterance to all the warmth of their feelings.

When the news of these animated discussions reached Henry, his displeasure broke out, and those immediately around him fanned his indignation. 'A great part of the youth of our university,' said the king, 'with contentious and factious manners, daily combine together.' . . . The courtiers, instead of moderating, excited his anger. Every day, they told him, these young men, regardless of their duty towards their sovereign, and not conforming to the opinions of the most virtuous and learned men of the university, meet together to deliberate and oppose his majesty's views. 'Hath it ever been seen,' exclaimed the king, 'that such a number of right small learning should stay their seniors in so weighty a cause?'* Henry, in exasperation, wrote to the heads of the houses: 'Non est bonum irritare crabrones.' It is not good to stir a hornet's nest. This threat excited the younger party still more: if the the term 'hornet' amused some, it irritated others. In hot weather, the hornet (the king) chases the weaker insects; but the noise he makes in flying forewarns them, and the little ones escape him. Henry could not hide his vexation; he feared lest the little flies should prove stronger than the big hornet. He was uneasy in his castle of Windsor; and the insolent opposition of Oxford pursued him wherever he turned his steps - on the terrace, in the wide park, and even in the royal chapel. 'What!' he exclaimed, 'shall this university dare show itself more unkind and wilful than all other universities, abroad or at home?'† Cambridge had recognized the king's right, and Oxford refused.

Wishing to end the matter, Henry summoned the High-Almoner Fox to Windsor, and ordered him to repeat at Oxford the victory he had gained at Cambridge. He then dictated to his secretary a letter to the recalcitrants: 'We cannot a little marvel that you, neither having respect to our estate, — being your prince and sovereign lord, — nor yet remembering such benefits as we have always showed unto you, have hitherto refused the accomplishment of our desire Permit no longer the private suffrages of light and wilful heads to prevail over the learned By your diligence redeem the errors and delays past

^{*} Burnet, Records, iii. p. 26.

Given under our signet, at our castle of Windsor *
Fox was entristed with this letter

Fox was entrusted with this letter

The Lord High Almoner and the Bishop of Lincoln imme diately called together the younger masters of the university, and declared that a longer resistance might lead to their

and declared that a longer resistance might lead to their run But the youth of Oxford were not to be overawed by threats of violence Lancoln had hardly finished when several masters of arts protested loudly Some even spoke 'very wickedly' Not permitting himself to be checked by such rebellion, the hishop ordered the poll to be taken Twenty seven voted for the king and twenty two against. The royal commissioners were not yet satisfied, they assembled all the faculties, and invited the members to give their opinion in turn. This intimidated many, and only eight or ten had courage enough to declare their opposition frankly The bishop, encouraged by such a result, ordered that the final vote should be taken by ballot Secrecy em boldened many of those who had not dared to speak, and, while thirty one voted in favor of the divorce, twenty five opposed it That was of little convequence as the two prelates had the majority They immediately drew up the statute in the name of the university and sent it to the king After which the hisbon, proud of his success, cele brated a solemn mass of the Holy Ghost † The Holy Ghost had not however, been much attended to in the business Some had obeyed the prince, others the pope and, if we desire to find those who obeyed Christ, we must look for them elsewhere

The university of Cambridge was the first to send in its submission to Henry The Sunday before Easter (1530),

^{*} Burnet Records 11 p 26 † State Papers 1 p 379 and note

Vice-Chancellor Buckmuster arrived at Windsor in the forenoon. The court was at chapel, where Latimer, reeently appointed one of the king's chaplains, was preaching. The vice-chancellor came in during the service, and heard part of the sermon. Latimer was a very different man from Henry's servile courtiers. He did not fear even to attack such of his colleagues as did not do their duty: 'That is no godly preacher that will hold his peace, and not strike you with his sword that you smoke again. Chaplains will not do their duties, but rather flatter. But what shall follow? Marry, they shall have God's curse upon their heads for their labor. The minister must reprove without fearing any man, even if he be threatened with Latimer was particularly bold in all that concerned the errors of Rome which Henry VIII. desired to maintain in the English Church. 'Wieked persons (he said),—men who despise God,—call ont, 'We are eliristened, therefore are we saved.' Marry, to be eliristened and not obey God's commandments is to be worse than the Turks! Regeneration cometh from the Word of God. It is by believing this Word that we are born again.' †

Thus spoke one of the fathers of the British Reformation: such is the real doctrine of the Church of England; the contrary doctrine is a mere relie of popery.

As the eongregation were leaving the chapel, the viecehancellor spoke to the secretary (Cromwell) and the provost, and told them the occasion of his visit. The king sent a message that he would receive the deputation after evening service. Desirous of giving a certain distinction to the decision of the universities, Henry ordered all the court to assemble in the audience-chamber. The vice-chancellor presented the letter to the king, who was much pleased with it. 'Thanks, Mr. Vice-Chancellor,' he said; 'I very much approve the way in which you have managed this matter. I shall give your university tokens of my satisfaction. . . .

^{*} Latimer, Sermons (Parker Soc.), pp. 46, 381. † Ibid. pp. 126, 471.

BOOK VI.

You heard Mr Latimer's sermon, he indeed, which he greatly praised, and then withdrew. The Duke of Norfolk, going up to the vice chancellor, told him that the king desired to see him the following day

The next day Dr Buckmaster, faithful to the appoint ment, wanted all the morning, but the king had changed his mind, and sent orders to the deputy from Cumbridge that he might depart as soon as he pleased The message had scaledy heen delivered before the Ling entered the gallery An idea which quite engrossed his mind urged him on, he wanted to speak with the doctor about the principle put forward by Crunmer Henry detained Buckmaster from one o'clock until six, repeating, in every possible form, 'Can the pope grant a dispensation when the law of God hath spoken?  He even displayed much ill humor hefore the vice chancellor, because this point had not been decided at Cambridge At last he quitted the gallery, and, to counterbalance the sharpness of his reproaches, he spoke very graciously to the doctor, who hurried away as fact as he could

CHAPTER VI.

HEYRY VIH SUPPORTED IN FFANCE AND ITALY UY THE CATHOLICS, AND BLAMED IN GERMANY BY THE PROF-LISTANTS

(JANUARY TO SEPTEMBER 1530)

Turking did not limit himself to asking the opinions of England, he appealed to the universal teaching of the Church, represented according to his views by the universities and not by the pope. The element of individual conviction, so strongly marked in Tyndale, Fryth, and Latimer, was wanting in the official reformation that proceeded from the prince. To know what Scripture said, Henry was about sending delegates to Paris, Bologna, Padna, and Wittemburg; he would have sent even to the East, if such a journey had been easy. That false catholicism which looked for the interpretation of the Bible to churches and declining schools where traditionalism, ritualism, and hierarchism were magnified, was a counterfeit popery. Happily the supreme voice of the Word of God surmounted this fatal tendency in England.

^{* &#}x27;An papa potest dispensara.' - Burnet, Records iu p. 24

Henry VIII., full of confidence in the friendship of the King of France, applied first to the university of Paris; but Dr. Pedro Garry, a Spanish priest, as ignorant as he was fanatical (according to the English agents),* eagerly took up the cause of Catherine of Aragon. Aided by the impetuous Beda, he obtained an opinion adverse to Henry's wishes.

When he heard of it, the alarmed prince summoned Du Bellay, the French ambassador, to the palace, gave him for Francis I. a famous diamond fleur-de-lis valued at 10,000/sterling, also the acknowledgments for 100,000 livres which Francis owed Henry for war expenses, and added a gift of 400,000 crowns for the ransom of the king's sans. Unable to resist such strong arguments, Francis charged Du Bellay to represent to the faculty of Paris 'the great scruples of Henry's conscience;'† whereupon the Sarbonne deliberated, and several doctors exclaimed that it would be an attaint upon the pope's honor to suppose him capable of refusing consolation to the wounded conscience of a Christian. During these debates, the secretary took the names, received the votes, and entered them on the minutes. A fiery papist observing that the majority would be against the Roman opinion, jumped up, spring upon the secretary, smitched the list from his hinds, and fore it up. All stricted from their seats, and 'there was great disorder and tumult.' They all spoke together, each trying to assert his own opinion, but as no one could make himself heard amid the general clausor, the doctors harried out of the room in a great rage. 'Beda noted like one possessed,' wrote Du Belhy

^{*} Stokesley to the Earl of Wiltshire, January 16, 1530: State Papers, vii. p. 227.

[†] Le Grand Preuves du Divorce, p. 459. This letter is from Du Bellay, and not from Montmoreney, as a distinguished historian has supposed.

Meanwhile the ambassadors of the King of England were walking up and down an adjoining gallery, waiting for the division Attracted by the shouts, they ran forward, and seeing the strange spectacle presented by the theologians, and 'hearing the language they used to one another,' they retired in great irritation. Du Bellay, who had at heart the alliance of the two countries, conjured Francis I to put an end to such 'impertinences' The president of the par liament of Paris consequently ordered Beda to appear before him, and told him that it was not for a person of his sort to meddle with the affairs of princes, and that if he did not cease his opposition, he would be punished in a way he would not soon forget. The Sorbonne profited by the les son given to the most influential of its members, and on the 2nd of July declared in favor of the divorce by a large majority The universities of Orleans, Angers, and Bourges had already done so, and that of Toulouse did the same shortly after . Henry VIII had Prance and England with hm

This was not enough he must have Ituly also that penusula with his agents, who had orders to obtain from the bishops and universities the declaration refused by the pope A rich and powerful despot is never in want of devoted men to carry out his designs

The university of Bologua, in the states of the Church, was, after Paris, the most important in the Catholic world A monk was in great repute there at this time Noble

^{*}The op mone of these universities are given in Burnet's Records i

by birth and an eloquent preacher, Battista Pallavieini was one of those independent thinkers often met with in Italy. The English agents applied to him; he declared that he and his colleagues were ready to prove the unlawfulness of Henry's marriage, and when Stokesley spoke of remuneration, they replied, 'No, no! what we have received freely, we give freely.' Henry's agents could not contain themselves for joy; the university of the pope declares against the pope! Those among them who had an inkling for the Reformation were especially delighted. On the 10th June the eloquent monk appeared before the ambassadors with the judgment of the faculty, which surpassed all they had imagined. Henry's marriage was declared 'horrible, excerable, detestable, abominable for a Christian and even for an infidel, forbidden by divine and human law under pain of the severest punishment.* . . . The holy father, who can do almost everything,' innocently continued the university, 'has not the right to permit such a union.' The universities of Padua and Ferrara hastened to add their votes to those of Bologna, and declared the marriage with a brother's widow to be 'null, detestable, profane, and abominable.'† Henry was eonqueror all along the line. He had with him that universal consent which, according to eertain illustrious doctors, is the very essence of Catholicism. Crooke, one of Henry's agents, and a distinguished Greek seholar, who discharged his mission with indefatigable ardor, exclaimed that 'the just cause of the king was approved by all the doetors of Italy.' ‡

In the midst of this harmony of eatholieity, there was one exception, of which no one had dreamt. That divorce which, according to the frivolous language of a certain party, was the cause of the Reformation in England, found opponents among the fathers and the children of the Reformation.

^{* &#}x27;Tale conjugium horrendum esse, execrabile, detestandum, viroque christiano etiam cuilibet infideli prorsus abominabile.' — Rymer, Acta, vi. p. 155.

Burnet, Records, iii. p. 87.

Henry's envoys were staggered 'My fidelity bindeth me to advertise your Highness,' wrote Crooke to the king. that all Lutherans be utterly against your Highness in this cause, and have letted [hindered] as much with their wietched poor malice, without reason or authority, as they could and might, as well here as in Padua and Ferrara. where he no small companies of them '* The Swiss and German reformers having been summoned to give an opinion on this point, Luther, Œeolampadius, Zwingle, Bucer, Graneus, and even Calvin.t all expressed the same opinion 'Certainly,' said Luther, 'the king has sinned by marrying his brother's wife, that sin belongs to the past, let repentance, therefore, blot it out, as it must blot out all our past suns But the marriage must not be dissolved, such a great sin, which is future, must not be permitted ! There are thousands of marriages in the world in which sin has a part, and yet we may not dissolve them A man shall cleave unto his wife, and they shall be one flesh This law is superior to the other, and overrules the leaser one' The collective opinion of the Lutheran doctors was in conformity with the just and Christian sentiments of Luther $ Thus (we repeat) the event which, according to Catholic writers, was the cause of the religious transformation of England, was approved by the Romanists and condemned by the evangelicals Besides, the latter knew very well that a Reformation must proceed, not from a divorce or a marriage, not from diplomatic negotiations or university statutes, but from the nower of the Word of God and the free conviction of Christians

While these matters were going on, Cranmer was at Rome, asking the pope for that discussion which the pontiff had

^{*} Burnet Pecords 1 p 82

[†] Calvin's letter or dissertation (Chless: Fpixiole, p. 284) harmonizes the apparently contradictory passages of I eviticus and Deuteronomy, but I much doubt if it belongs to this period

t 'Tam grande peccatum futurum permitti non debet '-Luiberi P.F.

Burnet, Records, 1 p 88

promised him at their conference in Bologna. Clement VII. had never intended to grant it: he had thought that, once at Rome, it would be easy to elude his promise; it was that which occupied his attention just now. Among the means which popes have sometimes employed in their difficulties with kings, one of the most common was to gain the agents of those princes. It was the first employed by Clement; he nominated Cranmer grand almoner for all the states of the King of England, some even say for all the Catholic world. It was little more than a title, and 'was only to stay his stomach for that time, in hope of a more plentiful feast hereafter, if he had been pleased to take his repast on any popish preferment.'* But Cranmer was influenced by purer motives; and without refusing the title the pope gave him, - since having the task of winning him to the king's side, he would thus have compromised his mission, -he made no account of it, and showed all the more zeal for the accomplishment of his charge.

The embassy had not succeeded, and they were getting uneasy about it in Eugland. Some of the pope's best friends could not understand his blindness. The two archbishops, the dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, the marquises of Dorset and Exeter, thirteen carls, four bishops, twenty-five barons, twenty-two abbots, and eleven members of the Lower House determined to send an address to Clement VII. 'Most blessed father,' they began, 'the king, who is our head and the life of us all, has ever stood by the see of Rome amidst the attacks of your many and powerful cnemies, and yet he alone is to reap no benefit from his labors. . . . Meanwhile we perceive a flood of miseries impending over the commonwealth.† If your Holiness, who ought to be our father, have determined to leave us as orphans, we shall seek our remedy elsewhere. . . . He that is sick will by any means be rid of his distemper; and there is hope in the exchange of miseries, when, if we cannot obtain what is good, we may obtain a lesser evil W beseech your Holmess to con ider with yourself, you profees that on earth you are Christ's vieur Endeavor then to show yourself so to be by pronouncing your sentence to the glory and praise of God' Clement gained time he remuned two months and a half without answering, thinking about the matter, turning it over and over in his mind The great difficulty was to harmonize the will of Henry VIII. who desired another wife, and that of Charles V, who insisted that he ought to keep the old one was only one mode of satisfying both these princes at once, and that was by the Ling's having the two wives together Wolsoy had already entertained this idea. More than two years before the pope had hinted as much to Da Casale 'Let him take another wife,' he had said, speaking of Henry * Clement now recurred to it, and having sent privately for Da Casale, he said to him 'This is what we have hit upon we permit his Maiesty to have two wives' The infallible pontiff proposed bigamy to a king Dr Casale was still more astonished than he had been at the time of Clement's first communication 'Holy father,' he said to the pope, 'I doubt whether such a mode will satisfy his Majesty, for he desires above all things to have the burden removed from his conscience 't

^{*} Fuller, Church History, p. 182.

^{† &#}x27;Malorum pelagus reipublicæ nostræ imminere cernimus ac certum quoddam diluvium comminari.' — Rymer, Acta, vi. p. 160.

This guilty proposal led to nothing, the ling, sure of the lords and of the people, advanced regulty in the path of independence. The dry after that on which the pope nuthorized him to take two wives, Henry issued a bold proclamation, pronouncing against whosever should ask for or bring in a papal bull contrary to the royal perogative 'imprisonment and further pumishment of their bodies according to

^{*} Rex aliam uxorem ducat. - Letter of G Da Casale, Orvieto, January 13 1528.

[†] Ut duas uxores habeat - Rome, September 28 1530 Herbert p.

t 'An conscientia satisfiers posset quam V M imprimis exonerare cup t. - Herbert, p 230 his Majesty's good pleasure.'* Clement, becoming alarmed, replied to the address: 'We desire as much as you do that the king should have male children; but, alas! we are not God to give him sons.'†

Men were beginning to stifle under these manœuvres and tergiversations of the papacy; they called for air, and some went so far as to say that if air was not given them, they must snap their fetters and break open the doors.

CHAPTER VII.

LATIMER AT COURT.

(JANUARY TO SEPTEMBER 1530.)

Henry, seeing that he could not obtain what he asked from the pope, drew nearer the evangelical party in his kingdom. In the ranks of the Reformation he found intelligent, pious, bold, and eloquent men, who possessed the confidence of a portion of the people. Why should not the prince try to conciliate them? They protest against the authority of the pope: good! he will relieve them from it; but on one condition, however,—that if they reject the papal jurisdiction they recognize his own. If Henry's plan had succeeded, the Church of England would have been a Cæsareo-papistical Church (as we see elsewhere) planted on British soil; but it was the Word of God that was destined to replace the pope in England, and not the king.

The first of the evangelical doctors whom Henry tried to gain was Latimer. He had placed him, as we have seen, on the list of his chaplains. 'Beware of contradicting the king, said a courtier to him, one day, mistrusting his finalness 'Speak as he speaks, and instead of presuming to lead him, strive to follow him' 'Marry, out upon thy counsell' replied Latimer, 'shall I say as he says? Say what your conscience hids yon . . . Still, I know that prudence is necessary.

^{*} Collier, ii. p. 60.

^{† &#}x27;Sed pro Deo non sumus, ut liberos dare possimus.' - H '.

Gutta cavat lapidem non vi sed supe cadendo

The drop of rain maketh a hole in the stone, not by violence, but by oft falling Likewise a prince must be won by a little and a little?

This conversation was not useless to the chaplain, who set to work seriously amid all the tumult of the court. He studied the Holy Scriptures and the Pathers, and frankly proclaimed the truth from the pulpit. But he had no private conversation with the king, who filled him with a certain fear The thought that he did not speak to Henry about the state of his soul troubled him. One day, in the month of November, the chaplain was in his closet, and in the volume of St. Augustine which lay before him he read these words 'He who for fear of any power hides the truth, provokes the wrath of God to come to him, for he fears men more than God' Another day, while studying St. Chrys ostom, these words struck him 'he is not only a traifor to the truth who openly for truth teaches a he, but he also who does not freely pronounce and show the truth that he knoweth' These two sentences sank deenly into his heart 'They made me sore afraid,' he continued, 'troubled and vexed me grievously in my conscience. He resolved to declare what God had taught him in Scripture. His frankness might cost him his life (lives were lost enoly in Henry's time), it mattered not 'I had rather suffer extreme punishment,' he said, 'than be a traiter unto the truth' †

Latimer reflected that the ecclesiastical law, which for

^{*} I marked them earnestly in the inward parts of mine heart." Latimer, Remains p 298

¹ Latimer, Remains, p 203.

nges had been the very essence of religion, must give way to evangelical faith—that the form must yield to the life. The members of the Church (calling themselves regenerate by baptism) used to attend catechism, be confirmed, join in worship, and take part in the communion without any real individual transformation; and then finally rest all together in the churchyard. But the Church, in Latimer's opinion, ought to begin with the conversion of its members. Lively stones are needed to build up the temple of God. Christian individualism, which Rome opposed from her theocratic point of view, was about to be revived in Christian society.

The noble Latimer formed the resolution to make the king understand that all real reformation must begin at home. This was no trifling matter. Henry, who was a man of varied information and lively understanding, but was also imperious, passionate, fiery, and obstinate, knew no other rule than the promptings of his strong nature; and although quite prepared to separate from the pope, he detested all innovations in doctrine. Latimer did not allow himself to be stopped by such obstacles, and resolved to attack this difficult position openly.

'Your Grace,' he wrote to Henry, 'I must show forth such things as I have learned in Scripture, or else deny Jesus Christ. The which denying ought more to be dreaded than the loss of all temporal goods, honor, promotion, fame, prison, slander, hurts, banishment, and all manner of torments and crueltics, yea, and death itself, be it never so shameful and painful.* . . . There is as great distance between you and me as between God and man; for you are here to me and to all your subjects in God's stead; and so I should quake to speak to your Grace. But as you are a mortal man having in you the corrupt nature of Adam, so you have no less need of the merits of Christ's passion for your salvation than I and others of your subjects have.'

Latimer feared to see a Church founded under Henry's patronage, which would seek after riches, power, and pomp; and he was not mistiken 'Our Saviour's life was very poor. In how vile and abject a place was the mother of Je us Christ brought to bed! And according to this begin ning was the process and end of his life in this world . But this he did to show us that his followers and vicars should not regard the treasures of this world Grace may see what means and craft the spirituality imagine to break and withstand the acts which were made in the last parliament against their superfluities'

^{*}Latimer, Works, ii. p. 298 (Parker Soc.).

Latimer desired to make the king understand who were the true Christians 'Our Saviour showed his disciples,' continued he, 'that they should he brought before Lings Wherefore take this for a sure conclusion, that where the Word of God is truly preached there is persecution, and where quietness and rest in worldly pleasure, there is not the tmith?

Latimer next proceeded to declare what would give real riches to England 'Your Grace promised by your last proclamation that we should have the Scripture in English Let not the wickedness of worldly men divert you from your goodly purpose and promise There are prelates who, under pretence of insurrection and heresy, hinder the Gos pel of Christ from having free course. . . They would send a thousand men to hell ere they send one to God'.

Latimer had reserved for the last the appeal he had determined to make to his master's conscience 'I pray to God that your Grace may do what God commandeth, and not what seemeth good in your own sight, that you may be found one of the members of his Church and a faithful min ster of his gifts, and not, he added showing contempt for a title of which Henry was very proud, and not a defender of his faith, for he will not have it defended by man's power, but by his word only

Wherefore, gracions ling, remember yourself Have pity on your soul, and think that the day is even at hand when you shall give account of your office and of the blood that hath been shed with your sword. In the which day that your Grace may stand steadfastly and not be ashamed, but be clear and ready in your reckoning, and to have (as they say) your quietus est scaled with the blood of our Saviour Christ, which only serveth at that day, is my daily prayer to Him that suffered death for our sins which also prayeth to His Father for grace for us continually.'*

^{*} Latimer, Worls in p 306 (Parker Soc)

Thus wrote the bold chaplain. Such a letter from Latimer to Henry VIII. deserved to be pointed out. The king does not appear to have been offended at it. He was an absolute prince, but there was occasionally some generosity in his character. He therefore continued to extend his kindness to Latimer, but did not answer his appeal.

Latimer preached frequently before the court and in the city. Many noble lords and old families still clung to the prejudices of the middle ages; but some had a certain liking for the Reformation, and listened to the chaplain's preaching, which was so superior to ordinary sermons. His art of oratory was summed up in one precept: 'Christ is the preacher of all preachers.' † 'Christ,' he exclaimed, 'took upon him our sins: not the work of sin - not to do it - not to commit it, but to purge it; and that way he was the great sinner of the world. ‡ . . . It is much like as if I owed another man 20,000l., and must pay it out of hand, or else go to the dungeon of Ludgate; and, when I am going to prison, one of my friends should come and ask, "Whither goth this man: I will answer for him; I will pay all for him." Such a part played our Saviour Christ with us.

Preaching before a king, he declared that the authority of Holy Scripture was above all the powers of the earth. 'God,' he said, 'is great, eternal, almighty, everlasting; and the Scripture, because of him, is also great, eternal, most mighty, and holy. . . . There is no king, emperor magistrate, or ruler but is bound to give credence unto this holy word!* He was cuttous not to put the 'two swords' into the same hand 'In this world God hath two swords', he said, 'the temporal sword resteth in the hands of kings, whereunto all subjects — as well the clergy as the laity — be subject The spiritual sword is in the hands of the ministers and preachers of God's Word to correct and reprove Make not a mingle mangle of them To God give thy soul, thy futh, . . . to the king, tribute and reverence? Therefore let the preacher amend with spiritual sword, fearing no man, though death should ensue.' I Such language astooished the court 'Were you at the sermon to day?' said one of his hearers to a zerlous courtier one day 'les,' replied the latter 'And how did you like the new chaplan?' 'Marry, even as I liked lim always — a seditious fellow's

^{*} Latimer, Works, ii. p. 309 (Parker Soc.).
† Ibid. i. p. 155.
‡ Ibid. p. 223.

Latimer did not permit himself to be intimidated. Firm in doctrine, he was at the same time eminently practical. He was a morable and this may explain how he was able to remain any time at court. Men of the world, who soon grow impatient when you preach to them of the cross, repentance, and change of heart, cannot help approxing of those who insist on certain rules of conduct. The king found it convenient to keep a great number of horses in abbeys founded for the support of the poor. One day when Latimer was preaching before him, he said,—'A prince ought not to prefer his horses above poor men. Abbeys were ordained for the comfort of the poor, and not for kings' horses to be kept in them '§

There was a dead silence in the congregation—no one dared turn his eyes towards Henry—and many showed symptoms of anger The chaptun had hardly left the pulpit, when a gentlema of the court, the lord chamberhan apparently, went up to him and asked, 'What hast thou to do with the king's horses? They are the maintenances and part of a king's honor, and also of his realm; wherefore, in speaking against them, ye are against the king's honor.' 'To take away the right of the poor,' answered Latimer, 'is against the honor of the king.' He then added, 'My lord, God is the grand-master of the king's house, and will take account of every one that beareth rule therein.' *

Thus the Reformation undertook to re-establish the rule of conscience even in the courts of princes. Latimer knowing, like Calvin, that 'the ears of the princes of this world are accustomed to be pampered and flattered,' armed himself with invincible courage.

The murmurs grew louder. While the old chaplains let things take their course, the other wanted to restore morality among Christians. The Reformer was alive to the accusations brought against him, for his was not a heart of steel. Reproaches and calumnies appeared to him sometimes like those impetuous winds which force the hushandman to fly hurrically for shelter to some covered place. O. Lord!' he exclaimed in his closet, 'these people pinch me; nay, they have a full bite at me.'† He would have desired to flee away to the wilderness, but he called to mind what had been done to his Master; 'I comfort myself,' he said, 'that Christ Himself was noted to be a stirrer up of the people against the emperor.'

The priests, delighted that Latimer censured the king, resolved to take advantage of it to ruin him. One day, when there was a grand reception, and the king was surrounded by his councillors and courtiers, a monk slipped into the midst of the crowd, and, falling on his knees before the monarch, said, 'Sire, your new chaplain preaches sedition.' Henry turned to Latimer: 'What say you to that, sir?' The chaplain bent his knee before the prince; and, turning to his accusers, said to them, 'Would you have me preach nothing concerning a king in the king's sermon?' His friends trembled lest he should be arrested. 'Your

^{*} Latimer, Works, i. p. 93.

Grace,' he continued, 'I put myself in your hands appoint other doctors to preach in my place before your Majesty. There are many more worthy of the room than I am If it be your Grace's pleasure, I could be content to be their servant, and bear their books after them. But if your Grace allow me for a preacher, I would desire you give me leave to discharge my conscience. Permit me to frame my teaching for my audience.'

Henry, who always liked Latimer, took his part, and the chaptur retired with a low bow. When he left the audience, his friends, who had watched this scene with the kemest emotion, surrounded him, saying, with tears in their eyes, † 'We were convinced that you would sleep to-night in the Tower' 'The king's heart is in the hand of the Lord,' he answered, calmir

The evangelical Reformers of England nobly maintained their independence in the presence of a catholic and despote king. Firmly convinced, free, strong men, they yielded neither to the seductions of the court nor to those of Rome. We shall see still more striking examples of their decision, bequeathed by them to their successors.

CHAPTER VIII

THE KING SEEKS AFTER TINDALE

(JANUARY TO MAY 1531)

HENRY VIII, finding that he wanted men like Latimer to resist the pope, sought to win over others of the same

^{*} Ibid The preacher when he left the vestry, was followed to the pulpit by an attendant carry ng h s books, † Latimer, Borls, i n 125

stamp. He found one, whose lofty range he understood immediately. Thomas Cromwell had laid before him a book, then very eagerly read all over England, namely, the Practice of Prelates. It was found in the houses not only of the citizens of London, but of the farmers of Essex, Suffolk, and other counties. The king read it quite as eagerly as his subjects. Nothing interested him like the history of the slow but formidable progress of the priesthood and prelacy. One parable in particular struck him, in which the oak represented royalty, and the ivy the papacy. 'First, the ivy springeth out of the earth, and then awhile creepeth along by the ground till it find a great tree. There it joineth itself beneath alow unto the body of the tree, and creepeth up a little and a little, fair and softly. And at the beginning, while it is yet thin and small, that the burden is not perceived, it seemeth glorious to garnish the tree in the winter, and to bear off the tempests of the weather. But in the mean season it thrusteth roots into the bark of the tree to hold fast withal; and ceaseth not to climb up till it be at the top and above all. And then it sendeth its branches along by the branches of the tree, and overgroweth all, and waxeth great, heavy, and thick; and sucketh the moisture so sore out of the tree and its branches, that it choketh and stifleth them. And then the foul stinking ivy waxeth mighty in the stump of the tree, and becometh a seat and a nest for all unclean birds and for blind owls, which hawk in the dark and dare not come at the light. Even so the Bishop of Rome at the beginning crope along upon the earth. . . . He crept up and fastened his roots in the heart of the emperor, and by subtilty clamb above the emperor, and subdued him, and made him stoop unto his feet and kiss them another while. Yea, when he had put the crown on the emperor's head, he smote it off with his feet again.'*

Henry would willingly have clapped his hand on his

^{*} Dominus autem papa statim percussit cum pede suo coronam imperatoris et dejecit eam in terram '— Tundala Ducatica of Duclatea = 170 'Parker Soc.).

aword to demand satisfaction of the pope for this outrage. The book was by Tyndale. Laying it down, the king reflected on what he had just read, and thought to himself that the author had some striking ideas on the accursed power of the pope, and that he was besides gifted with talent and zeal, and might render excellent service towards abolishing the papary in England.

Tyndale, from the time of his conversion at Oxford, set Christ above everything. He boldly three off the yoke of human traditions, and would take no other guide but Scrip ture only. Full of imagination and eloquence, active and ready to endure fatigue, he exposed himself to every danger in the fulfilment of his mission. Henry ordered Stephen Vaughta, one of his agents, then it Antwerp, to try and find the Reformer in Brabant, Flanders, on the banks of the Rhine, in Holland, wherever he might chance to be, to offer him a safe-conduct under the signmanual, to prevail on him to return to England, and to add the most gracious promises in behalf of his Majesty.

To gun over Tyndale seemed even more important than to have guined Latimer. Vaughan immediately undertook to seek hum in Antwerp where he was said to be, but could not find him. 'He is at Marburg,' end one, 'at Frinkfort,' said another, 'at Hamburg,' declared in third. Tyndale was invisible now as before. To make more certuin, Vaughan determined to write three letters directed to those three places, conjuring him to return to England; 'I have great hopes,' said the English agent to his friends, 'of having done something that will please his Mnjest,' Tyndale, the most scriptural of English reformers, the most in flexible in his fauth, laboring at the Reformation with the cordial approbation of the monarch, would truly have been something extraordinary.

^{*} If story of the Reformat on of the Sexteenth Century vol v

i'Upon the promise of your Majesty, be content to repair into Fus iant' - Vaugi an to Henry VIII Cotton MSS Galba bk x fol 42 Bible Ama. p 270.

t' Whatsoever surety he could reasonably desire - Vaughan to Cromwell, ibit p 200

Scarcely had the three letters been despatched when Vaughan heard of the ignominious chastisement inflieted by Sir Thomas More on Tyndale's brother.* Was it by such indignities that Henry expected to attract the Reformer? Vaughan, much annoyed, wrote to the king (26th January, 1531) that this event would make Tyndale think they wanted to entrap him, and he gave up looking after him. Three months later (17th April), as Vaughan was busy copying one of Tyndale's manuscripts in order to send it to Henry (it was his answer to the Dialogue of Sir Thomas More), a man knocked at his door. 'Some one, who ealls himself a friend of yours, desires very much to speak with you,' said the stranger, 'and begs you to follow me.'—

'Who is this friend? Where is he?' asked Vaughan.—
'I do not know him,' replied the messenger; 'but come along, and you will see for yourself.' Vaughan doubted whether it was prudent to follow this person to a strange place. He made up his mind, however, to accompany him. The agent of Henry VIII. and the messenger threaded the streets of Antwerp, went out of the city, and at last reached a lonely field, by the side of which the Scheldt flowed sluggishly through the level country.† As he advanced, Vaughan saw a man of noble bearing, who appeared to be about fifty years of age. 'Do you not reeognize me?' he asked Vaughan. 'I cannot call to mind your features,' answered the latter. 'My name is Tyndale,' said the stranger. 'Tyndale!' exclaimed Vaughan, with delight. 'Tyndale! what a happy meeting!'

Tyndale, who had heard of Henry's new plans, had no confidence either in the prince or in his pretended Reformation. The king's, endless negotiations with the pope, his worldliness, his amours, his persecution of evangelical Christians, and especially the ignominious punishment inflieted on John

^{*} History of the Reformation of the Sixteenth Century, tom. v. book xx. ch. 15.

^{† &#}x27;He brought me without the gates . . . into a field - Anderson. Annals of the English Bible, p. 272.

Tyndale all these matters disgusted him However, having been informed of the nature of Vaughan's mission, he desired to turn it to advantage by addressing a few warnings to the prince. 'I have written certim books,' he suid, 'to warn your Majesty of the subtle demeanor of the clergy of your realm towards your person, in which doing I showed the heart of a true subject, to the intent that your Grace might prepare your remedies against their subtle dreams. An exile from my native country, I suffer hunger, thirst, cold, absence of friends, everywhere encompassed with great danger, in innumerable hard and sharp fightings, I do not feel their asperity, by reason that I hope with my labors to do honor to God, true service to my prince, and pleasure to his comnons'*

'Cheer up,' said Vaughan, 'your exile, poverty, fightings, all are 'at an end, you can return to England'. . 'What matters it,' said Tyndde,' if my exile finishes, so long as the Bible is banished? Has the king forgotten that God has commanded His Word to be spread throughout the world? If it continues to be forbidden to his subjects, very death were more pleasant to me than life'!

Vaughan did not consider himself worsted. The messenger, who remained at a distance, and could hear nothing, was astonished at seeing the two men in that solitary field conversing together so long and with so much minimation. Itell me what guaruntees you desire, said Vaughan 'the king will grant them you'. 'Of course the king would give me a safe-conduct,' answered Tyndale, 'but the clergy would persuade him that promi es made to heretica are not binding.' Night was coming on Henry's agent might have had Tyndale followed and seized! The idea occurred to Vaughan, but he rejected it. Tyndale began, however, to feel himself ill at case § 'Farewell,' he said, 'you shall t'Lest I would have persued him '- Anderson, p 152.

^{*} Inderson (Chr), Annals of the Fuglish Bible, p 152

[†] Ibid

Being something fearful - Ibed

see me again before long, or hear news of me.' He then departed, walking away from Antwerp. Vaughan, who re-entered the city, was surprised to see Tyndale make for the open country. He supposed it to be a stratagem, and once more doubted whether he ought not to have seized the Reformer to please his master. 'I might have failed of my purpose,' he said.* Besides it was now too late, for Tyndale had disappeared.

As soon as Vaughan reached home, he hastened to send to London an account of this singular conference. Cromwell immediately proceeded to court, and laid before the king the envoy's letter and the Reformer's book. 'Good!' said Henry; 'as soon as I have leisure, I will read them both.'† He did so, and was exasperated against Tyndale, who refused his invitation, mistrusted his word, and even dared to give him advice. The king in his passion tore off the latter part of Vaughan's letter, flung it in the fire, and entirely gave up his idea of bringing the Reformer into England to make use of him against the pope, fearing that such a torch would set the whole kingdom in a blaze. He thought only how he could seize him and punish him for his arrogance.

He sent for Cromwell. Before him on the table lay the treatise by Tyndale, which Vaughan had copied and sent. 'These pages,' said Henry to his minister, while pointing to the manuscript, 'These pages are the work of a visionary: they are full of lies, sedition, and calumny. Vaughan shows too much affection for Tyndale.‡ Let him beware of inviting him to come into the kingdom. He is a perverse and hardened character, who cannot be changed. I am too happy that he is out of England.'

Cromwell retired in vexation. He wrote to Vaughan;

^{*} Cotton MSS. Titus, bk. i. fol. 6, 7. Anderson, Annals, i. p. 273.

^{† &#}x27;At opportune leasure his Highness would read the content.' — Ibid. p. 275.

^{‡ &#}x27;Ye bear much affection toward the said Tyndale.' — Cotton MSS. Galba, bk. x. fol. 388. Anderson, Annals, p. 275.

BOOK VI

but the king found the letter too weak, and Cromwell had to correct it to make it harmonize with the wrath of the prince.* An ambitious man, he bent before the ob tinate will of his master , but the loss of Tandale seemed irreparable Accordingly, while informing Vaughan of the kings anger, he added that, if wholesome reflection should bring Tyndale to reason, the king was 'so inclined to mercy, pity, and compassion't that he would doubtle-s see him with pleasure. Vaughan, whose heart Tyndale had gained, began to hunt after him again, and had a second interview with him He give him Cromwell's letter to read, and, when the Reformer came to the words we have just quoted about Henry's compassion, his eyes filled with tears I 'What gracious words l' he exclaimed 'les' said Vaughan, they have such sweetness that they would break the hardest heart in the world' Tindale, deeply moved, tried to find some mode of fulfilling his duty towards God and towards the king 'If his Majesty,' he said, 'would condescend to permit the Holy Scriptures to circulate among the people in all their purity, as they do in the states of the emperor and in other Christian countries, I would bind myself never to write again I would throw my self at his feet, offering my body as a sacrifice, ready to submit, if necessary, to torture and death?

But a gulf lay between the monarch and the Reformer Henry VIII saw the seeds of heresy in the Scriptures, and Tyndale rejected every reformation which they wished to curry out by pro-cribing the Bible 'Heresy springeth not from the Scripture,' he sud, 'no more than dukness from the sun's Tyndale disappeared again, and the name of his hiding place is unknown

^{*}The corrections are still to be seen in the original draft and are in dicated in the biographical notice of lyndale at the beginning of his Practices (Parker Society) pp 46 47

[†] State I opers vii p 303

t In such wise that water stoods in his eyes - State Papers vii p.

Tyndale Expuntion p 141

The King of England was not discouraged by the check he had received. He wanted men possessed of talent and zeal - men resolved to attack the pope. Cambridge had given England a teacher who might be placed beside, and perhaps even above, Latimer and Tyndale. This was John Fryth. He thirsted for the truth; he sought God, and was determined to give himself wholly to Jesus Christ. One day Cromwell said to the king, 'What a pity it is, your Highness, that a man so distinguished as Fryth in letters and sciences should be among the sectarians!' Like Tyndale, he had quitted England. Cromwell, with Henry's consent, wrote to Vaughan: 'His Majesty strongly desires the reconciliation of Fryth, who (he firmly believes) is not so far advanced as Tyndale in the evil way. Always full of mercy, the king is ready to receive him to favor. Try to attract him charitably, politically.' Vaughan immediately began his inquiries, - it was May, 1531, - but the first news he received was that Fryth, a minister of the Gospel, was just married in Holland. 'This marriage,' he wrote to the king, 'may by chance hinder my persuasion.' * This was not all: Fryth was boldly printing, at Amsterdam, Tyndale's answer to Sir Thomas More. Henry was forced to give him up, as he had given up his friend. He succeeded with none but Latimer, and even the chaplain told him many harsh truths. There was a decided incompatibility between the spiritual reform and the political reform. The work of God refused to ally itself with the work of the throne. The Christian faith and the visible Church are two distinct things. Some (and among them the Reformers) require Christianity - a living Christianity; others (and it was the case of Henry and his prelates) look for the Church and its hierarchy, and care little whether a living faith be found there or not. This is a capital error. religion must exist first; and then this religion must produce a true religious society. Tyndale, Fryth, and their friends desired to begin with religion; Henry and his followers with an eccleviastical society hostide to faith. The king and the reformers could not, therefore, come to an understanding. Henry, profoundly hurt by the boldness of those evangelical men, swore that, as they would not have peace, they should have war, . . . war to the kinfe

^{*} State Papers, vii. p. 302.

CHAPTER IX.

THE KING OF ENGLAND RECOGNIZED AS HEAD OF THE CHURCH

(JANUARY TO MARCH 1531)

HENRY VIII desired to introduce great changes into the ecclesiastical corporation of his kingdom. His royal power had much to bear from the power of the clergy It was the same in all Catholic monarchies, but England had more to complain of than others Of the three estates, Clergy, Nobility, and Commons, the first was the most powerful The nobility had been weakened by the civil wars, the commons had long been without authority and energy, the prelates thus occupied the first rank, so that in 1529 an archbi hop and cardinal (Wol ey) was the most powerful man in Eng land, not even the king excepted Henry had felt the yoke, and wished to free himself, not only from the domination of the pope, but al o from the influence of the higher clerg) If he had only intended to be avenged of the pontiff, it would have been enough to allow the Reformation to act, when a mighty wind blows from heaven, it sweeps away all the contrivances of men But Henry was deficient neither in prudence nor calculation He feared lest a diversity of doctrine should engender disturbances in his Lingdom Ile wished to free humself from the pope and the prelates, with out throwing himself into the arms of Tyndale or of Latimer.

Kings and people had observed that the domination of the papacy, and its anthority over the clergy, were an insurmountable obstacle to the antonomy of the State. As far back as 1268. St. Louis had declared that France owed allegiance to God alone; and other princes had followed his example. Henry VIII. determined to do more - to break the chains which bound the clergy to the Romish throne, and fasten them to the crown. The power of England, delivered from the papacy, which had been its cankerworm, would then be developed with freedom and energy, and would place the country in the foremost rank among nations. The renovating spirit of the age was favorable to Henry's plans; without delay he must put into execution the bold plan which Cromwell had mirolled before his eyes in Whitehall Park. Henry could think of nothing but getting himself recognized as head of the Church.

This important revolution could not be accomplished by a simple act of royal authority - in England particularly, where constitutional principles already possessed an incontestable influence. It was necessary to prevail upon the clergy to cross the Rubicon by entancipating themselves from Rome. But how bring it about? This was the subject of the meditations of the sagacious Cromwell, who, gradually rising in the king's confidence to the place formerly held by Wol-ev. made a different use of it. Urged by ambition, passessing an energetic character, a sound judgment, nusliaken firmness. no obstacle could arrest his activity. He sought how he could give the king the spiritual sceptre, and this was the plan on which he fixed. The kings of England had been known occasionally to revive old laws fallen into desnetude. and visit with heavy penalties those who had violated them. Cromwell represented to the king that the statutes made punishable any man who should recognize a dignity established by the pope in the English Church; that Wolsey, by exercising the functions of papal legate, had eneronched upon the rights of the Crown and been condemned, which was but justice, while the members of the clergy—who had recognized the unlawful jurisdiction of the pretended legate—had thereby become as guilty as he had been 'The statute of Premiumre,' he said, 'condemns them as well as their chief' Henry, who listened attentively, found the expedient of his Secretary of State was in conformity with the letter of the law, and that it put all the clergy in his power. He did not hesitate to give fall power to his ministers. Under such a state of things there was not one innocent person in England, the two houses of parliament, the privy cauncil, all the nation must be brought to the bar Henry, full of 'condescension', was pleased to confine him self to the clergy

The convocation of the province of Canterbury having met on the 7th of January, 1531, Cromwell entered the hall, and quietly took his sent among the bishops; then rising, he informed them that their property and benefices were to be confi cated for the good of his Majesty, because they had submitted to the unconstitutional power of the cardinal What terrible news! It was a thunderbolt to the e selfi h prelates, they were nmazed At length some of them plucked up a little courage 'The king himself had since tioned the authority of the cardinal legate,' they said 'We merely obeyed his supreme will Our resistance to his Majesty's proclamations would infallably have ruined us'-'That is of no consequence,' was the reply, 'there was the lin you should obey the constitution of the country even at the peril of your lives '. The terrified bishops laid at the foot of the throne a magnificent sum, by which they hoped to redeem their offences and their benefices But that was not what Henry desired he pretended to set little store by their money The threat of confication must constrain them to pay a ransom of still greater value 'My lord , said Cromwell, in a petition that some of you presented to the pope not long ago, you called the king your soul and your head.* Come, then, expressly recognize the supremacy of the king over the Church.† and his majesty, of his great goodness, will grant you your pardon.' What a demand! The distracted elergy assembled, and a deliberation of extreme importance began. 'The words in the address to the pope,' said some, 'were a mere form, and had not the meaning ascribed to them.'—'The king being mable to untie the Gordian knot at Rome,' said others, alluding to the divorce, 'intends to cut it with his sword.'‡—'The secular power,' exclaimed the most zealous, 'has no voice in ecclesiastical matters. To recognize the king as head of the Church would be to overthrow the catholic faith.

^{*} They ought to take notice of the constitution at their peril - Collyers, u. p. 81 Burnet, p. 103

. . The head of the Church is the pope.' The debute lasted three days, and, as Henry's ministers pointed to the theocratic government of Israel, a priest exclaimed, 'We oppose the New Testament to the Old; according to the gospel, Christ is head of the Church.' When this was told the king, he said, 'Very well, I consent. If you declare me head of the Church you may add under God.' In this way the papal claims were compromised all the more. 'We will expose ourselves to everything,' they said, 'rather than dethrone the Roman pontiff.'

The Bishops of Lincoln and Exeter were deputed to beseach the king to withdraw his demand: they could not so much as obtain an andience. Henry had made up his mind: the priests must yield. The only means of their obtaining pardon (they were told) was by their renouncing the papal supremacy. The bishops made a fresh attempt to satisfy both the requirements of the king and those of their own conscience. 'Shrink before the clergy and they are lions,' the courtiers said; 'withstand them and they are sheep.'—'Your fate is in your own hands. If you refuse

^{* &#}x27;Regia majestas nostrum caput atque anima.'— Coltycrs, Records, p. 8, 30 July, 1530.

^{† ·} Ecclesiæ protector et supremum caput.' - Coltyers, ii. p. 62.

t' Seeing this Gordian knot, to play the noble Alexander.' - Foxe, Acts, v. p. 55.

the king's demand, the disgrace of Wol ey may show you what you may expect' Archbishop Warham, president of the convocation a prudent man, far advanced in years, and near his end tried to hit upon some compromise. The great movements which aguated the Church all over Furope disturbed him. He had in times past complained to the king of Wol ev's usurnations,* and was not far from recognizing the royal supremacy He proposed to insert a simple clause in the act conferring the required jurisdiction on the king namely, Quantum per legem Christi heet so far as the law of Christ permits 'Mother of God!' exclaimed the king who like his 10val brother Prancis I, had a habit of saying irreverent things 'you have played me a shrewd turn I thought to have made fools of those prelates and now you have so ordered the business that they are likely to make a fool of me Go to them again and let me have the business passed without any quantums or tantums So far as the law of Christ permits! Such a reserve would make one believe that my authority was disputable't

Henry's ministers ventured on this occasion to resist him they showed him that this clause would prevent an immediate rupture with Rome and it might be repealed hereafter He yielded at last, and the archbishop submitted the chave with the amendment to convocation. It was a solemn moment for England The bishops were convinced that the king was asking them to do what was wrong the end of which would be a rupture with Rome In the time of H ! debrand the prelates would have answered No and found a sympathetic support in the laty But things had changed, the people were beginning to be weary of the long domina tion of the priests. The primate de irons of ending the matter, said to his collengues 'Do you recognize the king as sole protector of the Church and clergy of England and so far as is allowed by the law of Christ, also as your su preme head?" All remained speechless 'Will you let me know your opinions?' resumed the archbishop. There was a dead silence. 'Whoever is silent seems to consent,' said the primate.—'Then we are all silent,' answered one of the members.* Were these words inspired by courage or hy cowardice? Were they an assent or a protest? We cannot say. In this matter we cannot side either with the king or with the priests. The heart of man easily takes the part of those who are oppressed; but here the oppressed were also oppressors. Convocation next gave its support to the opinion of the universities respecting the divorce, and thus Henry gained his first victory.

^{*} Strype's Memorials i p 111 † Tytler Isfe of Menry i III p 312

Now that the king had the power, the clergy were permitted to give him their money. They offered a hundred thousand pounds sterling,—an enormous sum for those times,—nearly equivalent to fifteen times as much of our money. On the 22d of March, 1531, the courteons archbishop signed the document which at one stroke deprived the elergy of England of both riches and honor.†

The discussion was still more animated in the Convocation of York. 'If you proclaim the king supreme head,' said Bishop Tonstal, 'it can only be in temporal matters.'— 'Indeed!' retorted Henry's minister, 'is an act of convocation necessary to determine that the king reigns?—'If spiritual things are meant,' answered the bishop, 'I withdraw from convocation that I may not withdraw from the Church.'‡

'My lords,' said Henry, 'no one disputes your right to preach and administer the sacraments. Did not Paul submit to Cæsar's tribunal, and our Saviour himself to Pilate's?' Henry's ecclesiastical theories prevailed also at ^{* &#}x27;Qui tacet consentire videtur. Itaque tacemus omnes.'— Collyers, p. 63.

[†] The act is given in Wilkins, Concilia, iii. p. 742, and Rymer, Fædera, vi. p. 163.

[†] Ne ab ecclesia catholica dissentire videar, expresse dissentio.'— Wilkins, Concilia, iii. p. 745.

Collyers, ii. p. 64.

York A great revolution was effected in England, and fresh compromises were to consolidate it

The king, having obtained what he desired, condescended in his great mercy to pardon the clergy for their unpardon able offence of having recognized Wolsey as papal legate At the request of the commons this amnesty was extended to all England The nation, which at first saw nothing in in this affur but an act enfranchising themselves from the usurped power of the popes, showed their gratitude to Henry, but there was a reverse to the medal If the pope was despoiled the king was invested. Was not the function ascribed to him contrary to the Go pel? Would not this act impress upon the Anglican Reformation a territorial and pristocratic character, which would introduce into the Re formed Church the world with all its splendor and wealth? If the royal preeminence endows the Anglican Church with the nomps of worship of classical studies, of high dignities, will it not also carry along with it luxury, sinecures, and worldliness among the prelites? Shall we not see the royal authority pronounce on questions of dogma, and declare the most sacred doctrines indifferent? A little later an nitempt was made to limit the power of the Ling in religious matters We give not to our princes the ministry of God's Word or sacraments,' says the thirty seventh Article of Religion.

CHAPTER X

BEFARATION OF THE KING AND QUEEN

(MARCH TO JUNE 1531)

The king having obtained so important a concession from the clergy, turned to his parliament to ask a service of another had a concess to his contest to the concess.

On the 30th of March, 1531, the session being about to terminate, Sir Thomas More, the chancellor, went down to the House of Commons, and submitted to them the decision of the various universities on the king's marriage and the power of the none. The Commons looked at the affair essentially from a political point of view; they did not understand that, because the king had lived twenty years with the queen, he ought not to be separated from her. The documents placed before their eyes 'made them detest the marriage' of Henry and Catherine.* The chancellor desired the members to report in their respective counties and towns that the king had not asked for this divorce of his own will or pleasure, but 'only for the discharge of his conscience and surety of the succession of his crown.' † Enlighten the people,' he said, ' and preserve peace in the nation, with the sentiments of loyalty due to the monarch.

The king hastened to use the powers which universities, elergy, and parliament had placed in his hands. Immediately after the prorogation certain lords went down to Greenwich and laid before the queen the decisions which condemned her marriage, and urged her to accept the arbitration of four bishops and four lay peers. Catherine replied, sadly but firmly,—'I pray you tell the king I say I am his lawful wife, and in that point I will abide until the court of Rome determine to the contrary.'‡

The divorce which, notwithstanding Catherine's refusal, was approaching, caused great agitation among the people; and the members of parliament had some trouble to preserve order, as Sir Thomas More had desired them. Priests proclaimed from their pulpits the downfall of the Church and the coming of Antichvist; the mendicant friars scattered discontent in every house which they entered, the most fanatical of them not fearing to insimuate that the wrath of God would soon hurl the impious prince from his throne. In towns and villages, in castles and alchouses, men talked of nothing but the divorce and the primacy claimed by the Women standing at their doors, men gathering round the blacksmith's forge, spoke more or less disrespectfully of parhament, the hishops, the dangers of the Romish Church, and the prospects of the Reformation If a few friends met at night around the hearth, they told strange tales to one another The king, queen, pope, devil, saints, Cromwell, and the higher clergy formed the subject of their conversa tion The gipsies at that time strolling through the country added to the confusion Sometimes they would appear in the midst of these animated discussions, and prophesy lamentable events, at times cilling up the dead to make them speak of the future The terrible calamities they predicted froze their hearers with affright, and their simi ter prophecies were the cause of disorders and even of erimes Accordingly an act was passed pronouncing the penalty of banish ment against them

^{*} Lord Herbert, p. 353. † Hall, Chron. of England, p. 780. † Herbert, p. 354.

An unfortunate event tended still more to strike men's imaginations. It was reported that the Bishop of Rochester, that prelate so terrible to the reformers and so good to the poor, had narrowly escaped being poisoned by his cool Seventeen persons were taken ill after enting porridge at the episcopal palace. One of the hishop's gentlemen died, as well as a poor woman to whom the remains of the food had been given. It was maliciously remarked that the bishop was the only one who frinkly opposed the divorce and the royal supremacy. Calumny even mined at the throne. When Henry heard of this, he resolved to make short work of all such nonsense, he ordered the offence to be deemed as high treason, and the wretched cook was taken to Smithfield, there to be boiled to death? This was a variation of the penalty pronounced upon the evangilicals. Such was the cruel justice of the sixteenth century.

While the universities, parliament, convocation, and the

^{*} Bill against conjuration witchcraft, sorcerers, &c Herry VIII cap-

f Burnet i.p 110

nation appeared to support Henry VIII., one voice was raised against the divorce. It was that of a young man brought up by the king, and that voice moved him deeply. There still remained in England some scions of the house of York, and among them a nepliew of that unhappy Warwick whom Henry VII. had cruelly put to death. Warwick had left a sister Margaret, and the king, desirous of appeasing the remorse he suffered on account of the tragical end of that prince, 'the most innocent of men,'* had married her to Sir Richard Pole, a gentleman of her own family. She was left a widow with two daughters and three sons. The youngest, Reginald, became a favorite with Henry VIII., who destined him for the archiepiscopal see of Canterbury. 'Your kindnesses are such,' said Pole to him, 'that a king could grant no more, even to a son.' † But Reginald, to whom his mother had told the story of the execution of the unhappy Warwick, had contracted an invincible hatred against the Tudors. Accordingly, in despite of certain evangelical tendencies, Pole, seeing Henry separating from the pope, resolved to throw himself into the arms of the pontiff. Reginald, invested with the Roman purple, rose to be president of the council and primate of all England under Queen Mary. Elegant in his manners, with a fine intellect, and sincere in his religious convictions, he was selfish, irritable, and ambitious. Desires of elevation and revenge led a noble nature astray. If the branch of which he was the representative was ever to recover the erown, it could only be by the help of the Roman pontiffs. Henceforward their cause was his. Loaded with benefits by Henry VIII., he was incessantly pursued by the recollection of the rights of Rome and of the White Rose; and he went so far as to insult before all Europe the prince who had been his first friend.

At this time Pole was living at a house in the country,

^{* &#}x27;Omnium innocentissimum.' - Pole, De Unitate, p. 57.

^{† &#}x27;Ut nec rex pater principi filio majus dare possit.' - Pole, De Unitate, p. 85.

which Heary had given him. One day he received it this charming retreat a communication from the Duke of Norfolk

'The king destines you for the highest honors of the English Church,' wrote this nobleman, 'and offers you at once the important sees of York and Winche ter, left vacant by the death of Cardinal Wolsey' At the same time the duke asked Pole's ommon about the divorce Reginald's brothers, and particularly Lord Montagne, entreated him to answer as all the catholic world had answered, and not irritate n prince whose anger would rain them all. The blood of Warwick and the king's revolt against Rome induced Pole and yet that prince was his benefactor He funcied he had discovered a middle course which would permit him to satisfy alike his conscience and his king

He went to Whitehall, where Henry received him like a friend Pole hesitated in distress, he wished to let the

to reject with horror all the honors which Henry offered, king know his thoughts, but the words would not come to his has At last, encouraged by the prince's affibility, he summoned up his resolution and, in a voice trembling with emotion, said 'You must not separate from the queen' Henry had expected something different. Is it thus that his kindnesses are repaid? His eyes flashed with inger,

'If I possess any knowledge, to whom do I owe it unless to your Muesty? In listening to me you are listening to your own pupil'. The king recovered himself, and said, -'I will consider your opinion and send you my answer' Pole withdrew 'He put me in such a passion,' said the king to one of his gentlemen, 'that I nearly struck him But there is something in the man that wins my heart'

Montague and Reginald's other brother again conjured him to accept the high position which the king reserved for him, but his soul resolted at being subordinate to a Tudor He therefore wrote a memoir, which he presented to Heary, and in which he entreated him to submit implicitly the di

. Cum me and es alumnum inum and ca. - Pole. De Un tate p. 3

and he laid his hand on his sword Pole humbled himself

vorce question to the court of Rome. 'How could I speak against your marriage with the queen?' he said. 'Should I not accuse your Majesty of having lived for more than twenty years in an unlawful union?* By the divorce you will array all the powers against you,—the pope, the emperor; and as for the French... we can never find in our hearts to trust them. You are at this moment on the verge of an abyss... One step more, and all is over.† There is only one way of safety left your Grace, and that is submission to the pope.' Henry was moved. The boldness with which this young nobleman dared accuse him, irritated his pride; still his friendship prevailed, and he forgave it. Pole received the permission he had asked to leave England, with the promise of the continued payment of his pension.

Reginald Pole was, as it were, the last link that united the royal pair. Thus far the king had continued to show the queen every respect; their mutual affection seemed the same, only they occupied separate rooms.‡ Henry now decided to take an important step. On the 14th of July a new deputation entered the queen's apartment, one of whom informed her that as her marriage with Prince Arthur had been duly consummated she could not be the wife of her husband's brother. Then after reproaching her with having, contrary to the laws of England and the dignity of the crown, cited his Majesty before the pope's tribunal, he desired her to choose for her residence either the castle of Oking or of Estamsteed, or the monastery of Bisham. Catherine remained calm, and replied, - 'Wheresoever I retire, nothing can deprive me of the title which belongs to me. I shall always be his Majesty's wife.' § She left Windsor the same day, and removed to the More, a splendid mansion which Wolsey had surrounded with beautiful gar-

^{* &#}x27;Infra etiam belluarum vitam.' - Ibid. p. 55.

^{† &#}x27;The king standeth even upon the brink of the water; all his honor is drowned.' - Ibid.

^{‡ &#}x27;Had he not forborne to come to her bed.'- Lord Herbert, p. 335.

^{§ &#}x27;To what place soever she removed, nothing could remove her from being the king's wife.'— Herbert, p. 354.

dens; then to Estamsteed, and finally to Ampthill. The king never saw her again; hut all the papists and discon tented rallied round her. She entered into correspondence with the sovereigns of Enrope, and became the centre of a party opposed to the enancipation of England.

CHAPTER XI.

THE BISHOPS PLUNDER THE CLERGY, AND PERSECUTE THE PROTESTANTS.

(SEPTEMBER 1531 to 1532.)

As Henry, by breaking with Catherine, had broken with the pope, he felt the necessity of uniting more closely with his clergy. Wishing to proceed to the establishment of his new dignity, he required bishops, and particularly dexterous bishops. He therefore made Edward Lee, Archbishop of York, and Stephen Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester; and these two men, devoted to scholastic doctrines, ambitious and servile, were commissioned to inaugurate the new ecclesiastical monarchy of the King of England. Although the pope had hastened to send off their bulls, they declared they held their dignity 'immediately and only' of the king, and began without delay to organize a strange league. If the king needed the bishops against the pope, the bishops needed the king against the reformers. It was not long before this alliance received the baptism of blood.

But before proceeding so far, the prelates deliberated about the means of raising the 118,000L they had bound themselves to pay the king. Each wished to make his own share as small as possible, and throw the largest part of the burden upon his colleagues. The bishops determined to place it in great measure on the shoulders of the parochial clergy.

^{* &#}x27;Immediately and only upon your grace.'- Juramentum. Bymer, Acts, vi. p. 189,

Stokesley, Bishop of London, began the battle. An able, greedy, violent man, and jealous of his prerogatives, he called a meeting of six or eight priests on whom he believed he could depend, in order to draw up with their assistance such resolutions as he could afterwards impose more easily upon their brethren. These picked ecclesiastics were desired to meet on the 1st of September, 1531, in the chapter-house of St. Paul's.

The bishop's plan had got wind, and excited general indignation in the city. Was it just that the victims should pay the fine? Some of the laity, delighted at seeing the clergy quarrelling, sought to fan the flame instead of extinguishing it.

When the 1st of September arrived the bishop entered the chapter-house with his officers, where the conference with the eight priests was to be held. Presently an unusual noise was heard round St. Paul's: not only the six or eight priests, but six hundred, accompanied by a great number of citizens and common people, made their appearance. The crowd swayed to and fro before the cathedral gates, shouting and clamoring to be admitted into the chapter-house on the same footing as the select few. What was to be done? The prelate's councillors advised him to add a few of the less violent priests to those he had already chosen. Stokesley adopted their advice, hoping that the gates and bolts would be strong enough to keep out the rest. Accordingly he drew up a list of new members, and one of his officers, going out to the angry crowd, read the names of those whom the bishop had selected. The latter came forward, not without trouble; but at the same time the excluded priests made a vigorous attempt to enter. There was a fierce struggle of men pushing and shouting, but the bishop's officials having passed in quickly, those who had been nominated hurriedly closed the doors. So fur the victory seemed to rest with the hishon, and he was about to speak, when the uproor became desfening The priests outside, exasperated because their financial matters were to be settled without them, protested that they ought to hold their own pure strings Lay ing hands on whatever they could find, and aided by the buty they began to butter the door of the chapter house They succeeded the door gave way, and all, priests and citizens, rushed in together * The bishop's officials tried in vnin to stop them, they were roughly pushed aside † Their gowns were torn, then faces streamed with perspiration, their features were disfigured, and some even were wounded. The furious priests entered the room at last, storming and shouting It was more like a pack of hounds rushing on a stag than the reverend clergy of the metropolis of England appearing before their bishop. The prelate, who had tact, showed no anger, but sought rather to calm the rioters 'My brethren,' he said, 'I marvel not a bitle why yo be "o heady Ye know not what shall be said to you, therefore I pray you hear me patiently. Ye all know that we be men frul of condition, and by our lack of wisdom have misde meaned ourselves towards the king and fallen in a præmu nire, by reason whereof all our lands, goods, and chattels were to him a forfeit, and our bodies ready to be imprisoned Yet his Grace of his great elemency is pleased to partion tis, and to accept of a little instead of the whole of our benefices -nbout one hundred thousand pounds, to be paid in five years I exhort you to bear your parts towards payment of this sum granted' f

This was just what the priests did not want. They thought it strunge to be asked for money for an office they had not committed 'My lord,' answered one, 'we have never offended against the præmunire, we have never meddled with cardinal's faculties.* Let the bishops and abbots pay; they committed the offence, and they have good places.' - 'My lord,' added another, 'twenty nobles † a year is but a bare living for a priest, and yet it is all we have. Everything is now so dear that poverty compels us to say No. Having no need of the king's pardon we have no desire to pay.' These words were drowned in applause. 'No,' exclaimed the crowd, which was getting noisy again, 'we will pay nothing.' The bishop's officers grew angry, and came to high words; the priests returned abuse for abuse; and the citizens, delighted to see their 'musters' quarrelling, fanned the strife. From words they soon came to blows. The episcopal ushers, who tried to restore order, were 'buffeted and stricken,' and even the bishop's life was in danger. At last the meeting broke up in great confusion. Stokesley hastened to complain to the chancellor, Sir Thomas More, who, being a great friend of the prelate's, sent fifteen priests and five laymen to prison. They deserved it, no doubt; but the bishops, who, to spare their superfluity, robbed poor curates of their necessaries, were more guilty still.

The rest forced the door rushed in and the b shop s servants were beaten at I ill used — Burnet i p. 100

[†] They struck the bishop a officers over the face - Itali, Chronicles of England p. 783

tilall Chronicles.

Such was the unity that existed between the bishops and the priests of England at the very time the Reformation was appearing at the doors. The prelates understood the danger to which they were exposed through that evangelical doctrine, the source of light and life. They knew that all their ecclesiastical pretensions would ernmble away before the breath of the divine Word. Accordingly, not content with robbing of their little substance the poor pastors to whom they should have been as fathers, they determined to deprive those whom they called heretics, not only of their money, but of their liberty and life. Would Henry permit this?

The king did not wish to withdraw England from the

^{*} Ibid. p. 783.

[†] The noble was worth six shillings and eightpence.

papel jurisdiction without the assent of the clergy If he did so of his own authority, the priests would rise against him and compare him to Luther There were at that time three great parties in Christendom the evangelical, the catholic, and the popish Henry purposed to overthrow popery, but without going so far as evangelism he desired to remain in catholicism One means occurred of satisfying the clergy Although they were fanatical partisans of the Church, they had sacrificed the pope, they now imagined that, by sacrificing a few heretics, they would atone for their con ardly submission. In o later age Louis XIV did the same to make up for errors of another kind The provincial synod of Canterbury met and addressed the king 'Lour Highness one time defended the Church with your pen, when you were only a member of it, now that you are its supremo head your Muesty should crush its caemies, and so shall your merits exceed all praise'.

In order to prove that he was not another Luther, Henry VIII consented to hand over the desciples of that heretic to the priests, and gave them outhority to imprison and burn them, provided they would oid the king to resume the power usurped by the pope. The hi hops immediately began to hunt down the friends of the Gospel

A will had given rise to much talk in the county of Gloucester William Tracy, a gentleman of irreprocabable conduct and 'full of good works, equally generous to the clergy and the laity,' I had died, praying God to sive his soul through the ments of Jesus Christ, but leaving no money to the priests for masses. The primate of Fingland had his bones dug up and burnt. But this was not enough they must also burn the living

^{*} Tanta ejus Majestatis memta quod null's laudibus equari queant." — Concilia, M. Brit, p. 742

[†] Latimer Sermons i p 46 (Parker Soc.) Tyndale, Op ill. p. 231

CHAPTER XII.

THE MARTYRS.

(1531.)

THE first blows were aimed at the court-chaplain. The bishops, finding it dangerous to have such a man near the king, would have liked (Latimer tells us) to place him on burning coals.* But Henry loved him, the blow failed, and the priests had to turn to those who were not so well at court. Thomas Bilney, whose conversion had begun the Reformation in England,† had been compelled to do penance at St. Paul's Cross; but from that time he became the prey of the direct terror. His backsliding had manifested the weakness of his faith. Bilney possessed a sincere and lively piety, but a judgment less sound than many of his friends. He had not got rid of certain scruples which in Luther and Calvin had yielded to the supreme authority of God's Word.‡ In his opinion none but priests conscerated by bishops had the power to bind and loose.§ This mixture of truth and error had caused his fall. Such sincere but imperfectly enlightened persons are always to be met with - persons who, agitated by the scruples of their conscience, waver between Rome and the Word of God.

At last faith gained the upper hand in Bilney. Leaving his Cambridge friends, he had gone into the Eastern counties to meet his martyrdom. One day, arriving at a hermitage ^{* &#}x27;Ye would have raked in the coals.' — Latimer, Works, i. p. 46 (Parker Soc.); Tyndale, Op. iii: p. 231.

[†] History of the Reformation of the Sixteenth Century, vol. v. bk. xviii. ch. ii. ix. xii.; bk. xix. ch. vii.; bk. xx. ch. xv.

t'A man of a timorous conscience, and not fully resolved touching that matter of the Church.' — Foxc, Acts, p. 649.

^{§ &#}x27;Soli sacerdotes, ordinati ritè per pontifices, habent claves.' - Ibic

78

in the vicinity of Norwich, where a pious woman dwelt, his words converted her to Christ. He then began to preach openly in the fields' to great crowds His voice was heard in all the county Weeping over his former fall, he said 'That doctrine which I once abjured is the truth Let my example be a lesson to all who hear me' Before long he turned his steps in the direction of London, and, stopping at Ipswich, was not content to preach the Gospel only, but violently attacked the errors of Rome before an astonished audience † Some monks had erept among his hearers, and Bilney, percuring them, called out 'The Lamb of God taketh away the sins of the world If the Bishop of Rome dares say that the bood of St Francis saves, he blasphemes the blood of the Saviour' John Huggen, one of the monks, immediately made a note of the words Bilney continued 'To invoke the caints and not Chri t, is to put the head under the feet and the feet above the head' Richard Seman, the other brother, took down these words 'Men will come after me,' continued Bilney, 'who will teach the same fath, the true go pel of our Saviour, and will disentangle you from the errors in which deceivers have bound you so long' Brother Julius hastened to write down the bold prediction Latimer, surrounded by the favors of the king and the luxury of the great, natched has friend from afar He called to mind their walks in the fields round Cambridge, their scrious conversation as they climbed the hill afterwards called after them the 'heretic's bill,' $ and the visits they had paid together to the poor and to the prisoners † Latimer hall seen Bilney very recently at Cambridge in fear and anguish, and had tried in van to restore han to peace "He now

^{*} The anachoress whom he had converted to Christ' - Foxe, Acts p 612

Like as if a man should take and str ke off the beat and set it under † Herbert p 357 the foot, and to set the foot above. - Foxe, Acis tv p. 649

f Ibid Lalimer, Remnias p zhi.

rejoiced that God had endned him with such strength of faith that he was ready to be burnt for Christ's sake.'

Bilney, drawing still nearer to London, arrived at Greenwich about the middle of July. He procured some New Testaments, and, hiding them carefully under his clothes, called upon a humble Christian named Staple. Taking them 'out of his sleeves,' he desired Staple to distribute them among his friends. Then, as if impelled by a thirst for martyrdom, he turned again towards Norwich, whose bishop, Richard Nix, a blind octogenarian, was in the front rank of the persecutors. Arriving at the solitary place where the pious 'anachoress' lived, he left one of the precious volumes with her. This visit cost Bilney his life. The poor solitary read the New Testament, and lent it to the people who came to see her. The bishop, hearing of it, informed Sir Thomas More, who had Bilney arrested,* brought to London, and shut up in the Tower.

Bilney began to breathe again: a load was taken off him; he was about to suffer the penalty his fall deserved. In the room next his was John Petit; a member of parliament of some eloquence, who had distributed his books and his alms in England and beyond the seas. Philips, the under-gaoler of the Tower, who was a good man, told the two prisoners that only a wooden partition separated them, which was a source of great joy to both. He would often remove a panel, and permit them to converse and take their frugal meals together.†

This happiness did not last long. Bilney's trial was to take place at Norwich, where he had been captured: the aged Bishop Nix wanted to make an example in his diocese. A crowd of monks — Augustins, Dominicans, Franciscans, and Carmelites — visited the prison of the evangelist to convert him. Dr. Gall, provincial of the Franciscans, having consented that the prisoner should make use of Scripture, was shaken in his faith, but, on the other hand, Stokes, an Augustin and a determined panist, repeated to Biliney 'If you die in your commons, you will be lost'

^{* &#}x27;Fit empoigner.' — Crespin, Actes des Marlyrs, p. 101. † Strype, p. 313.

The trral commenced, and the Ipswich monks gave their evidence 'He said,' depo ed William Cade, 'that the Jews and Saracens would have been converted long since, if the idolatry of the Christians had not disgasted them with Christianity'—'I heard him say,' added Richard Neale '"down with your gods of gold, silver, and stone "'—'He stated,' resumed Cade, 'that the priests take away the offerings from the saints, and hang them about their women's necks, and then, if the offerings do not prove fine enough, they are out upon the images again 't

Ivery one foresaw the end of this pitcous trial. One of Bilney's friends endeavored to save him. Lutimer took the muter into the pulpit, and conjured the judges to decide according to justice. Although Bilney's name was not uttered, they all knew nho was meant. The Bishop of London went and complained to the king that his chiplata had the adactity to defend the heretic against the bishop and his judges? There is not a preacher in the world, said Lattmer, who would not have spoken as I have done, although Bilney had never existed? The chiplain escaped once more, thanks to the fator he enjoyed with Henry.

Biling was condemned, and, after being degraded by the priests, was handed over to the aberill, who, having great respect for his virtues, begged pardon for discharging has dut. The prudent bishop wrote to the chancellor, asking for an order to burn the heretic. 'Burn him first, rudely answered More, 'and then ask me for a bill of indemnity' $

A few of Bilney's friends went to Norwich to bid him farewell among them was Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury. It was in the evening, and Bilney was taking his lust meal. On the table stood some frugal fure (ale brew), and on his countenance beamed the joy that filled his soul. 'I am surprised,' said one of his friends, 'that you can eat so cheerfully.'- 'I only follow the example of the husbandmen of the county,' answered Bilney, 'who, having a ruinous house to dwell in, yet bestow cost so long as they may hold it up.' With these words he rose from the table, and sat down near his friends, one of whom said to him: 'To-morrow the fire will make you feel its devouring fierceness, but God's Holy Spirit will cool it for your everlasting refreshing.' Bilney, appearing to reflect upon what had been said, stretched out his hand towards the lamp that was burning on the table, and placed his finger in the flame. 'What are you doing?' they exclaimed. 'Nothing,' he replied; 'I am only trying my flesh. To-morrow God's rods shall burn my whole body in the fire.' And, still keeping his finger in the flame, as if he were making a curious experiment, he continued: 'I feel that fire by God's ordinance is naturally hot; but yet I am persuaded, by God's Holy Word and the experience of the martyrs, that when the flames consume me I shall not feel them. Howsoever this stubble of my body shall be wasted by it, a pain for the time is followed by joy unspeakable.' He then withdrew his finger, the first joint of which was burnt. He added, ' When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt.' † 'These words remained imprinted on the hearts of all who heard them until the day of their death,' says a chronicler.

^{* &#}x27;As he had planted himself upon the firm rock of God's Word' - Foxe Acts, by p 643

[†] Foxe Acts, ir p 648 † Latimer, Horls II p 330 Parker Soc b

Beyond the city gate — that known as the Bishop's gate — was a low valley, called the Lollards' pit: it was surrounded by rising ground, forming a sort of amphitheatre. On Saturday, the 19th of August, a body of javeliu-men came to fetch Bilney, who met them at the prison gate.

^{*} Latimer, Works, ii. p. 650 (Parker Soc.).

[†] Isaiah xliii. 2. In Bilney's Bible, which is preserved in the library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, this passage (verses 1-3) is marked in the margin with a pen.

One of his friends approaching and exhorting him to be firm, Bilney replied 'When the sulor goes on board his ship and launches out into the stormy sea, he is tosed to and fro by the waves, but the hope of reaching a perceful baven makes him bear the danger. My voyage is beginning, but whatever storms I shall feel, my ship will soon reach the port.

Bilney pa sed through the streets of Norwich in the midst of a dense crowd, his demennor was grave, his features calm His head had been shaved, and he wore a layman's gown Dr Warner, one of his friends, accom panied him, another distributed liberal alms all along the route The procession descended into the Lollards' pit, while the spectators covered the surrounding hill. On arriving at the place of punishment, Bilney fell on his knees and prayed, and then rising up, warmly embraced the stake and his ed it † Turning his eyes towards heaven, he next repeated the Apostles' Creed, and when he con fes.ed the incarnation and crucifixion of the Saviour his emotion was such that even the spectators were moved Recovering himself he took off his gown, and ascended tho pile, reciting the hundred and forty third p ilm Thrice he repeated the second verse ' Enter not into judgment with thy seriant, for in thy sight shall no man living be justified." And then he added 'I stretch forth my hands unto thee, my soul thirsteth after thee' Turning towards the execu tioner he said 'Are you ready?' - 'les,' was the reply Bilney placed himself against the post, and hell up the chain which bound him to it. His friend Warner, with eyes filled with tears took a last farewell Bilney smiled kin lly at him and saul 'Doctor, pasce gregem tuum, feed voor thock, that when the Lord cometh he may find you so doing Several monks who had given contence against him per ceiving the emotion of the spectators, began to trendle, and whispered to the martyr 'The e people will believe that we are the cause of your death, and will withhold their alms.' Upon which Bilney said to them: 'Good folks, be not angry against these men for my sake; even should they be the authors of my death, it is not they.'* He knew that his death proceeded from the will of God. The toreh was applied to the pile: the fire smouldered for a few minutes, and then suddenly burning up ficrcely, the martyr was heard to utter the name of Jesus several times. A strong wind which blew the flames on one side prolonged his agony; thrice they seemed to retire from him, and thrice they returned, until at length, the whole pile being kindled, he expired.

[·] Latimer Berts si p 654 (Parker Soc.). 1 loxe, icts iv p 6 5 note

A strange revolution took place in men's minds after this death: they praised Bilney, and even his persecutors acknowledged his virtues. 'Mother of Christ,' exclaimed the Bishop of Norwich (it was his usual oath), 'I fear I have burnt Abel and let Cain go.' Latimer was inconsolable; twenty years later he still lamented his friend, and one day preaching before Edward VI. he called to mind that Bilney was always doing good, even to his enemies, and styled him 'that blessed martyr of God.' †

One martyrdom was not sufficient for the enemies of the Reformation. Stokesley, Lee, Gardiner, and other prelates and priests, feeling themselves guilty towards Rome, which they had sacrificed to their personal ambition, desired to expiate their faults by sacrificing the reformers. Seeing at their feet a fatal gulf, dug between them and the Roman pontiff by their faithlessness, they desired to fill it up with corpses. The persecution continued.

There was at that time a pious evangelist in the dungeons of the Bishop of London. He was fastened upright to the wall, with chains round his neck, waist, and legs. Usually the most guilty prisoners were permitted to sit down, and even to lie on the floor; but for this man there was no rest.

^{*} Latimer, Works, ii. p. 655 (Parker Soc.).

^{† &#}x27;And toward his enemy so charitable.' — Latimer, Works, ii. p. 880. (Parker Soc.).

It was Richard Bayfield, accused of bringing from the con tinent a number of New Testaments translated by Tyndule * Wheo one of his gaolers told him of Bilney's martyrdom, he exclaimed 'And I too, and bundreds of men with me, will die for the faith he has confessed' He was brought shortly afterwards before the episcopal court. 'With what intent,' asked Stokesley, 'did you bring into the country the errors of Lather, Chechampadus the great heretic, and others of that damnable sect ?" - "To make the Gospel Lnown,' answered Bayfield, 'nod to glorify God before the people't Accordingly, the bishop, having con demned and then degraded him, sommoned the lord mayor and sheriffs of London, 'by the bowels of Jesus Christ' fhe had the presumption to say), to do to Bayfield 'necording to the laudable custom of the famous realm of England't '0 ye priests,' said the gospeller, as if iospired by the Spirit of God, 'is it not enough that your lives are wicked, but you must prevent the life according to the Gospel from spread ing among the people?' The hishop took up his errorer and struck Bayfield so violently on the chest that he fell backwards and famted $ He revived by degrees, and said, on regaining his consciousness 'I thank God that I am delivered from the wicked church of Antichrist, and am going to be a member of the true Church which reigns tri umphant in heaven' He mounted the pile, the flumes touching him only on one side, consumed his left arm. With his right hand Bayfield separated it from his body, and the arm fell Shortly after this he ceased to pray, because he had ceased to live

John Tewkesbury, one of the most respected merchants in London, whom the bishops had put twice to the rack

[.] History of the Peformation of the Eixteenth Century vol v bk xx ch.

t 'To the intent that the Gospel of Christ might be set forward.' Foxe Acts iv p. 633
1 lbid p. 657

I took his crozier-s. aff and smote him on the breast - Ibid

men of God had not been burnt by that prince, it might possibly have been imagined that he was the author of the transformation of England, but the blood of the reformers cried to heaven that he was its executioner

CHAPTER XIII

THE KING DESPOILS THE POPE AND THE CLERGY

(MARCH TO MAY 1532)

HENRY VIII having permitted the bishops to execute their task of persecution, proceeded to carry out his own, that of making the paper disgorge. Unhappily for the clergy, the king could not attack the pope, and they entirely exped the blows. The duel between Henry and Clement was about to become more violent, and in the space of three months (March, April, and May) the Romish Church, stripped of important prerogatives, would learn that, after so many ages of wealth and honor, the hour of its humble tool laid come at last.

Henry was determined, above all things, not to permit his cause to be tried at Rome. What would be thought if he yielded? "Could the pope," wrote Henry to his envoys, constrain kings to leave the charge God had entrusted to them in order to humble themselves before him? That would be to tread under foot the glory of our person and the privileges of our kingdom. If the pope persits, take your leave of the pontiff, and return to its immediately."

"The pope," added Norfolk, "would do well to reflect if he intend the continuance of good obedience of Fingland to the see apostoble."

Catherine on her part did not remain behind: she wrote a pathetic letter to the pope, informing him that her husband had banished her from the palace. Clement, in the depths of his perplexity, behaved, however, very properly: he called upon the king (25th January) to take back the queen, and to dismiss Anne Boleyn from court. Henry spiritedly rejected the pontiff's demand. 'Never was a prince treated by a pope as your Holiness has treated me,' he said; 'not painted reason," but the truth alone, must be our guide.' The king prepared to begin the emancipation of England.

Thomas Cromwell is the representative of the political reform achieved by that prince. He was one of those powerful natures which God creates to work important things. His prompt and sure judgment taught him what it would be possible to do under a Tudor king, and his intrepid energy put him in a position to accomplish it. He had an instinctive horror of superstitions and abuses, tracked them to their remotest corner, and threw them down with a vigorous arm. Every obstacle was scattered under the wheels of his car. He even defended the evangelicals against their persecutors, without committing himself, however, and encouraged the reading of Holy Scripture; but the royal supremacy, of which he was the originator, was his idol.

The exactions of Rome in England were numerous: the king and Cromwell were content for the moment to abolish one, the appropriation by the papacy of the first year's income of all ecclesiastical benefices. 'These annates,' said Cromwell, 'have cost England eight hundred thousand ducats since the second year of Henry VII.† If, in consequence of the abolition of annates, the pope does not send a bishop his bull of ordination, the archbishop or two bishops shall ordain him, as in the old times.' Accordingly, in March, 1532, the Lower House agreed to a resolution, which they expressed in these words A cest bille les commitnes sont assentes, To this bill the Commons assent.

^{*} Burnet, Records, i. p. 100.

[†] This was equivalent to two millions and a half sterling of our money. Burnet, Records, ii. p. 96. Statutes of the Realm, iii. p. 388.

The bishops were overloyed they had to incur great expenses for their establishment, and the first money ari ing from their benefice went to the pope Their friends used to mike them peeumary ndvances, but if the bishop died shortly ofter his enthromization, these advances were lost Some of the bishops, fearing the opposition of the pope, exclumed 'These exactions are contrary to God's law St. Paul bids us withdraw ourselves from all such as walk inordinately Therefore, if the pope claims to keep the annates, let it please your Majesty and parliament to withdraw the obedience of the people from the see of Rome.' The king was more moderate than the prelates he said he would wait a year or two before giving his assent to the bill

If the bisbops refused the popo his ancient revenue, they refused the king the new nuthority claimed by the crown, and maintained that no secular power had any right to med dle with them † Cromwell resisted them, and determined to carry out the reform of abuses 'The clergy,' and the Commons to the king, 'make laws in convocation without your assent and ours which are in opposition to the statutes of the realm, and then excommunicate those who violate such laws ' A second time the frightened bishops vainly prayed the king to make his laws harmonize with their Henry VIII musted that the Church should conform to the State, and not the State to the Church, and he was inexorable The bishops knew well that it was their union with powerful pontiffs, always ready to defend them against kings, which had given them so much strength in the middle ages, and that now they must yield They therefore lowered their flag before the authority which they had themselves set up Convocation did, indeed, make a last effort. It repre-

^{*} Strype, Eccl Memor 1 pt is p. 168.

t There needeth not any temporal power to concur with the same. -Strype, Leck Memor L p 202.

[&]quot;Declaring the infringers to incur into the terr ble sentence of ex communication - Wilkins, Conceles, bi. p 751

72.5

sented that 'the authority of bishops proceeds immediately from God, and from no power of any secular prince, as your Highness hath shown in your own book most excellently written against Martin Luther.' But the king was firm, and made the prelates yield at last.* Thus was a great revolution accomplished: the spiritual power was taken away from those arrogant priests who had so long usurped the rights of the members of the Church. It was only justice; but it ought to have been placed in better hands than those of Henry VIII.

Cromwell was preparing a fresh blow that would strike the pontiff's triple crown. He drew his master's attention to the oaths which the bishops took at their consecration, both to the king and to the pope. Henry first read the oath to the pope. 'I swear,' said the bishop, 'to defend the papacy of Rome, the regality of St. Peter, against all men. If I know of any plot against the pope, I will resist it with all my might, and will give him warning. Heretics, schismatics, and rebels to our holy father, I shall resist and persecute with all my power.' † On the other hand, the bishops took an oath to the king at the same time, wherein they renounced every clause or grant which, coming from the pope, might be in any way detrimental to his Majesty. In one breath they must obey the pope and disobey him.

Such contradictions could not last: the king wanted the English to be, not with Rome but with England. Accordingly he sent for the Speaker of the Commons, and said to him: 'On examining the matter closely, I find that the bishops, instead of being wholly my subjects, are only so by halves. They swear an oath to the pope quite contrary to that they swear to the crown; so that they are the pope's subjects rather than mine.‡ I refer the matter to your care.' Parliament was prorogued three days later on account of the plague, but the prelates declared that they renounced all orders of the pope prejudicial to his Maje ty's rights *

^{* &#}x27;The king made them buckle at last.'— Strype, Eccles. Memorials, i. p. 204.

^{† &#}x27;Prosequar et impugnabo.'— Burnet, Reformation, i. p. 250 (Oxford, 1829).

[‡] Burnet, Hist. Reform. i. p. 249 (Oxford, 1829).

The political party was delighted, the papal party con founded. The convents recehoed with rumors, include tions, and the strangest projects. The monks, during the vi its they made in their daily rounds, raved against the encreachments made on the power of the pope. When they went up into the pulpit, they declaimed against the sacrilege of which Cromwell (they said) was the nuther and the English people the victims.

To the last the Fngli h priests had hoped in Sir Thomas More That de ciple of Erremus had acted like his master After as ailing the Romish superstitions with biting jests, he had turned round, and seeing the Reformation attack them with weapons still more powerful, he had fought against the evangelicals with fire For two years he had filled the of fice of lord-chancellor with unequalled activity and integrity Convocation having offered him four thousand pounds sterling 'for the pains he had taken in God's quarrel,' † he an swered 'I will receive no recompense save from God nlone, and when the priests urged him to accept the money he said 'I would sooner throw it into the Thames.' He did not per ecute from any mercenary motives, but tle more he advanced, the more bigoted and funatical he became I very Sunday he put on a surplice and sang mass at Chel ser. The Duke of Norfolk surprised him one day in this equipment. 'What do I see?' he exclaimed chancellor acting the parish clerk . . you dishonour your office and your king ' 1- ' Not so,' answered Sir Tloma's scriously, 'for I am honoring his avister and ours'

The great question of the bishop's outh warned him if it he could not serve both the king and the pope. His mil was soon mile up. In the afternoon of the 16th of May be went to Whitchall gardens, where the king nwaitel him.

* Themes Mer to be gra 1 m p 157

^{*} Wilkins (meiles i p 304

¹ ft 1 p. 192

and in the presence of the Duke of Norfolk resigned the seals.* On his return home, he cheerfully told his wife and daughters of his resignation, but they were much disturbed by it. As for Sir Thomas, delighted at being freed from his charge, he indulged more than ever in his flagellations, without renouncing his witty sayings — Ernsmus and Loyola combined in one.

Henry gave the seals to Sir Thomas Andley, a man well disposed towards the Gospel: this was preparing the emancipation of England. Yet the Reformation was still exposed to great danger.

Henry VIII. wished to abolish popery and set catholicism in its place — maintain the doctrine of Rome, but substitute the authority of the king for that of the pontiff. He was wrong in keeping the catholic doctrine; he was wrong in establishing the jurisdiction of the prince in the church. Evangelical Christians had to contend against these two evils in England, and to establish the supreme and exclusive sovereignty of the Word of God. Can we blame them if they have not entirely succeeded? To attain their object they willingly have poured out their blood.

CHAPTER XIV.

LIBERTY OF INQUIRY AND OF PREACHING IN THE SIX-TEENTH CENTURY.

(1532.)

THERE are writers who seriously ascribe the Reformation of England to the divorce of Henry VIII., and thus silently pass over the Word of God and the labors of the evangelical men who really founded protestant Christianity in that country As well forget that hight proceeds from the sun But for the fath of such men as Bilney, Latimer, and Tyn dale, the Church of Eagland, with its king ministers of state, parhament, hishops, cathedrals, liturgy, literarchy, and ceremonies, would have been a gallant bark, well supplied with masts, sails, and rigging, and manned by able sailors, but acted on by no breath from heaven would have stood still It is in the humble members of the kingdom of God that its real strength hes 'Tho e whom the Lord has exalted to high estate,' says Calvin, 'most often fall back little by little, or are ruined at one blow' England, with its wealth and grandeur, needed a counter poise the living faith of the poor in spirit. If a people at tain a high degree of material pro perity, if they conquer by their energy the powers of nature, if they compel in dustry to lavish its stores on them, if they cover the seas with their ships, the more distant countries with their colonies and marts, and fill their warehouses and their dwell age with the produce of the whole earth, then great dangers en Material things threaten to extinguish the sucred fire in their bosoms, and unless the Holy Glot compass them raises up a salutary opposition against such saares, that people, instead of acting a moralizing and enviloring part, may turn out nothing better than a huge noisy machine, ft ted only to satisfy sulgar appetites For a nation to do jutice to a high and glorious calling, it must bave within itself the life of futh, holmess of conscience, and the hope of in corruptible riches At this time there were men in Enga land in whose hearts God had kindled a holy flame, and wlo were to become the most important instruments of its moral

^{* &#}x27;In horto suo.' - Rymer, vi. p. 171.

About the end of 1531, n young minister, John Niel of son, surmaned Lambert, was an board one of the ships that traded between Loadon and Antwerp He was chaplan to the Inglish factory at the latter place, well versed in the writings of I inher and other reformers infinite with 170 dale, and had preached the Gorpel with power Heing aceused of heresy by a certain Barlow, he was seized, put in irons, and sent to London. Alone in the ship, he retraced in his memory the principal events of his life — how he had been converted at Cambridge by Bilney's ministry; how, mingling with the crowd around St. Paul's Cross, he had heard the Bishop of Rochester preach against the New Testament; and how, terrified by the impiety of the priests, and burning with desire to gain the knowledge of God, he had crossed the sea. When he reached England, he was taken to Lambeth, where he underwent a preliminary examination. He was then taken to Ottford, where the archbishop had a fine palace, and was left there for some time in a miserable hole, almost without food. At last he was brought before the archbishop, and called upon to reply to forty-five different articles.

Lambert, during his residence on the Continent, had become thoroughly imbued with the principles of the Reformation. He believed that it was only by entire freedom of inquiry that men could be convinced of the truth. But he had not wandered without a compass over the vast occan of human opinions: he had taken the Bible in his hand, believing firmly that every doctrine found therein is true, and everything that contradicts it is false. On the one hand he saw the ultramontane system which opposes religious freedom, freedom of the press, and even freedom of reading; on the other hand protestantism, which declares that every man ought to be free to examine Scripture and submit to its teachings.

The archbishop, attended by his officers, having taken his seat in the palace chapel, Lambert was brought in, and the examination began.

- ' Have you read Luther's books?' asked the prelate.
- 'Yes,' replied Lambert, 'and I thank God that ever I did so, for by them hath God shown me, and a vast multitude of others also, such light as the darkness cannot abide.' Then testifying to the freedom of inquiry, he added: 'Luther desires above all things that his writings and the writings of all his adversaries may be tran litted into all language, to the intent that all people may see and know what is said on each side, whereby they may better judge what is the truth. And this is done not only by hundreds and thousands, but by whole extres and countries, both high and low. But the continued) in England our pictures are so drowned in voluptuous bring that they have no lessure to study God's Scripture, they abhor it, no less than they abhor death, giving no other reason than the tyrannical saying of Sardanapalus. Sie colo, sie jubeo, sit pro ratione coluntar, So I will, so do I command, and let my will for reason stand.

Lambert, wishing to make these matters intelligible to the people, and 'When you desire to buy cloth, you will not be suisfied with sceing one merchants wares, but go from the first to the second, from the second to the third, to find who has the best cloth Will you be more remiss about your soul's health? When you go a journey, not knowing perfectly the way, you will inquire of one min after another, so ought we likewise to seek about entering the kingdom of heaven. Chrysostom himself tenches you this?

Read the works not only of Luther, but al o of all others, he they ever so ill or good. No good law forbids it, but only constitutions phares and Warham, who was as much opposed then to the hberty of the press as the popes are now, could see nothing but a boundless choes in this freedom of inquiry. Images are sufficient, he said, to keep Christ and His strints in our remembrance. But Lumbert exclaimed. What live we to do with senseless stones or wood curved by the hund of mun? That Word which came from the breast of Christ Himself showeth us perfectly His blessed will.

Warham having que tioned Lambert as to the number of his followers, he maswered "A great multitude through all regions and realms of Christendom think in like wise as I have showed. I ween the multitude mounteth nigh unto the one half of Christendom.'* Lambert was taken back to prison; but More having resigned the seals, and Warham dying, this herald of liberty and truth saw his chains fall off. One day, however, he was to die by fire, and, forgetting all controversy, to exclaim in the midst of the flames: 'Nothing but Jesus Christ.'

[°]F ze Acts v pp. 184 185 f Chrysostom in opera imperfecto f Foxe 4cts v p 203,

There was a minister of the Word in London who exasperated the friends of Rome more than all the rest; this man was Latimer. The court of Henry VIII., which was worldly, magnificent, fond of pleasures, intrigue, the elegances of dress, furniture, banquets, and refinement of language and manners, was not a favorable field for the Gospel. 'It is very difficult,' said a reformer, 'that eostly trappings, solemn banquets, the excesses of pride, a flood of pleasure and debauchery should not bring many evils in their train.' Thus the priests and courtiers could not endure Latimer's sermons. If Lambert was for freedom of inquiry, the king's chaplain was for freedom of preaching: his zeal sometimes touched upon imprudence, and his biting wit, his extreme frankness, did not spare his superiors. One day, some honest merchants, who hungered and thirsted for the Word of God, begged him to come and preach in one of the city churches. Thrice he refused, but yielded to their prayers at last. The death of Bilney and of the other martyrs had wounded him deeply. He knew that wild beasts, when they have once tasted blood, thirst for more, and feared that these murders, these butcheries, would only make his adversaries fiercer. He determined to lash the persecuting prelates with his sareasms. Having entered the pulpit, he preached from these words in the epistle of the day: Ye are not under the law, but under grace. † 'What!' he exclaimed, 'St. Paul teaches Christians that they are not under the law. . . . What does he mean? more law! St. Paul invites Christians to break the law.

^{*} Foxe, Acts, v. p. 225.

. . . Quick I inform against St. Paul, seize him and take him before my Lord Bishop of London! . . The good apostle must be condemned to beur a fagot at St. Paul's Cross. What a goodly sight to see St. Paul with a fagot on his back, before my lord in person scated on his episcopal throne! . . . But no! I am mistaken, his lord-hip would not be satisfied with so little . . . he would sooner burn him?

This ironical language was to cost Latimer dear. To no purpose had he spoken in one of those churches which being denendencies of a monastery, were not under eniscopal jurisdiction everybody about him condemned him and embittered his life The courtiers talked of his sermons, shrugged their shoulders, nointed their fingers at him when he approached them, and turned their backs on him The favor of the king, who had perlians emiled at that burst of pulpit orstory, had some trouble to protect him. The court became more intolerable to him every day, and Latimer, withdrawing to lus clo et, gave vent to many a heavy sigh "What tortures I endure I' he said, "in what a world I live! Hatred ever at work, fretions fighting one against the other, folly and vanity lealing the dance, dissimulation, irreligion, debauchers, all the vices stalking abroad in open . . It is too much If I were able to do somedas but I have neither the talent nor the industhung try required to fight agunst these monsters . . . I am we ary of the court'

Littmer had recently been presented to the living of West Kington, in the diocese of Sahsbury Wishing to uphold the hoerty of the Chirsten Church, and seeing that it existed no longer in London, he re olved to try and find it elsewhere "I am leaving" he said to one of his friends "I shall go and hive in my part h" "" What is that you say?" excluded the other, "Gromwell, who is at the puncale honors, and has profound designs, intends to do great things for you . . . If you have the court, you nill be forgot ten, and your rivals will rise to your place.' — 'The only fortune I desire,' said Latimer, 'is to be useful.' He departed, turning his back on the episcopal crosier to which his friend had alluded.

[·] Latimer, Horls II p. 24 (1 arket Soc).

Latimer began to preach with zeal in Wiltshire, and not only in his own parish, but in the parishes around him. His diligence was so great, his preaching so mighty, says Foxe,* that his hearers must either believe the doctrine he preached or rise against it. 'Whosoever entereth not into the fold by the door, which is Christ, be he priest, bishop, or pope, is a robber,' said he. 'In the Church there are more thieves than shepherds, and more goats than sheep.'† His hearers were astounded. One of them (Dr. Sherwood) said to him: 'What a sermon, or rather what a satire! If we believe you, all the hemp in England would not be enough to hang those thieves of bishops, priests, and eurates.I It is all exaggeration, no doubt, but such exaggeration is rash, audaeious, and impious.' The priests looked about for some valuut champion of Rome, ready to fight with him the guarrel of the Church.

One day there rode into the village an old doctor, of strange aspect; he wore no shirt, but was covered with a long gown that reached down to the horse's heels, 'all bedirted like a slobber,' says a chronicler.\(\setminus\) He took no care for the things of the body, in order that people should believe he was the more given up to the contemplation of the interests of the soul. He dismounted gravely from his horse, proclaimed his intention of fasting, and began a series of long prayers. This person, by name Hubberdin, the Don Quixote of Roman-catholicism, went wandering all over the kingdom, extolling the pope at the expense of kings and even of Jesus Christ, and declaiming against Luther, Zwingle, Tyndale, and Latimer.

^{*} Foxe, Acts, vii. p. 454.

^{† &#}x27;Plures longe fures esse quam pastores.' - Foxe, Acts, vii. p. 479.

^{† &#}x27;Quibus latronibus suffocandis ne Angliæ totius canavum sufficere prædicabas.' — Ibid. p. 478.

[§] Strype, i. p. 245.

On a feast-day Hubberdin put on a clerical gown rather cleriner than the one he generally wore, and went into the pulpit, where he undertook to prove that the new doctrine came from the duril—which he demonstrated by sto res, fables, dreams, and amusing dialogues. He danced and hopped and leaped about, and gesticulated, as if he nere a stage player, and his sermon a sort of interfade. His heriers were surprised and diverted, Lutimer was disgusted 'You he,' he said 'when you call the faith of Scripture a new doctrine, unless you mean to say that it makes new creatures of those who receive it'

Hubberdin being unable to shut the mouth of the elequent chaplain with his mountebank tricks, the bishops and nobility of the neighborhood resolved to denounce Latimer A messenger handed him a writ, summoning him to appear personally before the Bishop of London to unswer touch ing certain excesses and crimes committed by him † Putting down the paper which continued this threatening mes eage, Latimer began to reflect. His position was critical Ho was at that time suffering from the stone, with pains in the head and bowels. It was in the dead of winter, and moreover he was alone at West Kington, with no friend to ndvise him Being of a generous and daring temperament, he rushed hastily into the heat of the combat, but was carily dejected 'Jesu mercy I what a world is this,' he excluded, 'that I shall be put to so great labor and pains above my power for preaching of a poor simple sermon! But we must needs suffer, and so enter into the kingdom of Christ'!

The terrible summons lay on the table I attimer took it up and read it lie was no longer the brilliant court-chaplin who charmed fashionable congregations ly his cloquence, he was a poor country minister, forsaken ly all

[#] Strype & p 945

[†] Crimina sen excessus graves personal ter responsurus '- Ibid p.

³ Oportet pati et sie intrare .- Latimer Works, il p. 251 (Parket Bon.).

He was sorrowful. 'I am surprised,' he said, 'that my lord of London, who has so large a diocese in which he ought to preach the Word in season and out of season,* should have leisure enough to come and trouble me in my little parish... wretched me, who am quite a stranger to him.' He appealed to his ordinary; but Bishop Stokesley did not intend to let him go, and being as able as he was violent, he prayed the archbishop, as primate of all England, to summon Latimer before his court, and to commission himself (the Bishop of London) to examine him. The chaplain's friends were terrified, and entreated him to leave England; but he began his journey to London.

On the 29th of January, 1532, a court composed of bishops and doctors of the eanon law assembled, under the presidency of Primate Warham, in St. Paul's Cathedral. mer having appeared, the Bishop of London presented him a paper, and ordered him to sign it. The reformer took the paper and read it through. There were sixteen articles on belief in purgatory, the invocation of saints, the merit of pilgrimages, and lastly on the power of the keys which (said the document) belonged to the bishops of Rome, 'even should their lives be wicked,' † and other such topics. imer returned the paper to Stokesley, saying: 'I eannot sign it.' Three times in one week he had to appear before his judges, and each time the same seene was repeated: both sides were inflexible. The priests then changed their tacties: they began to tease and embarrass Latimer with in numerable questions. As soon as one had finished, another began with sophistry and plausibility, and interminable subterfuges. Latimer tried to make his adversaries keep within the eirele from which they were straying, but they would not hear him.

One day, as Latimer entered the hall, he noticed a change in the arrangement of the furniture. There was a chimney, ^{* &#}x27;Tempestive, intempestive, privatim, publice.' - Ibid.

^{† &#}x27;Etiam si male vivant.' — Latimer. Works, ii. p. 466 (Parker Soc.); and Foxe, Acts, vii. p. 456.

in which there had been a fire before on this day there was no fire, and the fireplace was invisible. Some typestry hing down over it, and the table round which the judges sat was in the middle of the room. The accused was serted between the table and the chimiey. 'Master Latimer,' said an aged bishop, whom he beheved to be one of his friends, 'pray speak a little buider. I am hard of hearing, is you know.' Latimer, surprised at this remark, pricked up his ears, and fancied he heard in the fireplace the noise of a pen upon paper.' (Ho, ho!' thought he, 'they have hidden some one behind there to take down my answers'. He replied cautiously to captious questions, much to the embar rassment of the judges.

enemies, but still more with their 'troublesome unquiet ness,' f because by keeping him in London they obliged him to neglect his duties, and especially because they made it a crime to preach the truth The archbishon, wishing to gran him over by marl's of esteem and affection, invited him to come and see him . hut Latimer declined, being unwilling at any price to renounce the freedom of the pulpit. The reformers of the sixteenth century did not contend that all doctrines should be preached from the same pulpit, but that exangelical truth should be freely preached everywhere 'I have desired and still desire,' wrote Latimer to the archbishop, 'that our people should learn the difference between the doctrines which God has taught and those which proceed only from ourselves Go, said Jesus, and teach all things What things? all things whatsoever I .

What things all things to hatsoeter Jou thinh fit to preach! Let us all then make an effort to preach with one voice the things of God I have sought not my grun, but Christ's gun, not my glory, but Gods glory And so long as I have a breath of life remaining, I will continue to do 50.

^{* &#}x27;I heard a pen walking in the chimner behind the cloth - Latimer, Sermons 1 p 294

[†] Foxe Acts vis p 455

t 'Non diest omn a que vob s ipsis videntur pre I canda. - Foxe Acts isi n 147

Thus spoke the bold preacher. It is by such unshakable fidelity that great revolutions are accomplished.

As Latimer was deaf to all their persuasion, there was nothing to be done but to threaten the stake. The charge was transferred to the Convocation of Canterbury, and on the 15th of March, 1532, he appeared before that body at Westminster. The fifteen articles were set before him. 'Master Latimer,' said the archbishop, 'the synod calls upon you to sign these articles.' - 'I refuse,' he answered. - All the bishops pressed him earnestly. 'I refuse absolutely,' he answered a second time. Warham, the friend of learning, could not make up his mind to condemn one of the finest geniuses of England. 'Have pity on yourself,' he said. 'A third and last time we entreat you to sign these articles.' Although Latimer knew that a negative would probably consign him to the stake, he still answered, 'I refuse absolutely.' †

The patience of Convocation was now exhausted. 'Heretic! obstinate heretic!' exclaimed the bishops. 'We have heard it from his own mouth. Let him be excommunicated. The sentence of excommunication was pronounced, and Latimer was taken to the Lollards' Tower.

Great was the agitation both in city and court. The creatures of the priests were already singing in the streets songs with a burden like this:

Wherefore it were pity thou shouldst die for cold.t

'Ahl' said Latimer in the Martyr's Tower, 'if they had asked me to confess that I have been too prompt to use sarcasm, I should have been ready to do so, for sin is a heavy load. O God! unto Thee I cry; wash me in the blood of Jesus Christ.' He looked for death, knowing well that few ^{* &#}x27;Donec respirare licebit, stare non desinam.'- Ibid.

^{† &#}x27;Tertio requisitus ut subscriberet, recusavit.'- Wilkins, Concilia, iii. p. 747.

[†] Strype, Records, i. p. 180.

left that tower except for the scaffold 'What is to be done?' sud Warham and the hishops Many of them would have handed the prisoner over to the manistrate to do what was customary, but the rule of the papacy was coming to an end in England, and Latimer was the king's chaplain One dexterous prelate suggested a means of reconciling everything 'We must obtain something from him, be it ever so little, and then report everywhere that he has recanted *

Some priests went to see the prisoner 'Will you not yield anything?' they asked -'I have been too violent,' said Latimer, 'and I bumble myself accordingly' -- But will you not recognize the ment of works ? '- 'No!'-'Prayers to the saints?' - 'No1' - 'Purgatory ?' - 'No1' - 'The power of the keys given to the pope?' - 'No! I tell you'-A bright idea occurred to one of the priests Luther taught that it was not only permitted, but praiseworthy, to have the crucifix and the images of the saints, provided that it was merely to remind us of them and not to iavoke them He had added, that the Reformation ought not to abolish fast days, but to strive to make them realities. Latimer declared that he was of the same opinion

The deputation hastened to carry this news to the bishops The more fanatical of them could not make up their minds to be satisfied with so little What I no purgatory, no virtue in the mass, no prayers to saints, no power of the keys, no meritorious works! It was a signal defeat, but the bishops knew that the king would not suffer the condemna tion of his chaplain Convocation decided, after a long discu sion that if Master Latimer would sign the two articles, he should be absolved from the sentence of excommunica tion In fact, on the 10th of April the Church withdrew the condemnation it had already pronounced †

^{*} Luther Wieder de himmlischen Propheten, und Explication du 6m6 chapitre de St Mathieu

t 'Fust absolutus a sententia excommunicat onis '- Wilkins Concide, Li p 747

CHAPTER XV.

HENRY VIII. ATTACKS THE PARTISANS OF THE POPE AND THE REFORMATION.

(1532.)

THE vital principle of the Reformation of Henry VIII. was its opposition both to Rome and the Gospel. He did not hesitate, like many, between these two doctrines: he punished alike, by exile or by fire, the disciples of the Vatican and those of Holy Scripture.

Desiring to show that the resolution he had taken to separate from Catherine was immutable, the king had lodged Anne Boleyn in the palace at Greenwich, although the queen was still there, and had given her a reception room and a royal state. The crowd of courtiers, abandoning the setting star, turned towards that which was appearing above the horizon. Henry respected Anne's person and was eager that all the world should know that if she was not actually queen she would be so one day. There was a want of delicacy and principle in the king's conduct, at which the catholic party were much irritated, and not without a cause.

The monks of St. Francis who officiated in the royal chapel at Greenwich took every opportunity of asserting their attachment to Catherine and to the pope. Anne vainly tried to gain them over by her charms; if she succeeded with a few, she failed with the greater number. Their superior, Father Forest, Catherine's confessor, warmly defended the rights of that unhappy princess. Preaching at St. Paul's Cross, he delivered a sermon in which Henry was violently attacked, although he was not named. Those who had heard it made a great noise about it, and Forest was summoned to the court. 'What will be done to him?' people asked; but instead of sending him to prison, as many expected, the king received him well, spoke with him for half an hour, and 'sent him a great piece of beef from his own table'

On returning to his convent, Forest described with triimph this flattering reception, but the king did not attributed his object. Among these monks there were men of independent, perhaps of function, character, whom no favors could gain over

One of them, by name Peto, until then unknown, but afterwards of great repute in the catholic world us cardinal legate from the pope in England, thinking that Forest had not said enough, determined to go further Anne Bolcyn's elevation filled him with anger he longed to speak out, and as the king and all the court would be present in the chapel on the 1st of May, be chose for his text the words of the prophet Elijah to King Ahab The dogs shall lick thy blood t He drew a portrait of Aliab, described his malice and wickedness, and although he did not name Henry VIII, certain passages made the hearers feel uncomfortable. At the peroration, turning towards the king, he said 'Now hear, O king, what I have to say unto thee, as of old time Micaiah spoke to Alub This new marriage is unlawful There are other preachers who, to become rich abbots or mighty bishops, betray thy soul, thy honor, and thy posterity Take heed lest thou, being seduced like Ahab, find Ahab's punishment who had his blood licked up by the dogs'

The court was assounded, but the king, whose features were unmoved during this apostrophe, waited until the end of the service, left the chipel as if nothing had hippened, and allowed Peto to depart for Conterbury. But Heavy could not permit such invectives to pass unnoticed A clergyman natured Kirwan was commissioned to preach in the same chapted on the following Sunday. The congregation was still more numerous than before, and more curious also.

^{*}Tyndale, Treatures, p 35, Strype, Vemorials, i 257, iii, bk i p 257; bk ii pp 30 136
†1 Kings xx: 19

Some monks of the order of Observants, friends of Peto, got into the rood-loft, determined to defend him. The doctor began his sermon. After establishing the lawfulness of Henry's intended marriage, he came to the sermon of the preceding Sunday and the insults of the preacher. 'I speak to thee, Peto, he exclaimed, 'who makest thyself Micaiah; we look for thee, but thou art not to be found, having fled for fear and shame.' There was a noise in the rood-loft, and one of the Observants named Elstow rose and called out: 'You know that Father Peto is gone to Canterbury to a provincial council, but I am here to answer you. And to this combat I challenge thee, Kirwan, prophet of lies, who for thy own vainglory art betraying thy king into endless perdition.'

The chapel was instantly one scene of confusion: nothing eould be heard. Then the king rose: his princely stature, his royal air, his majestic manners overawed the crowd. All were silent, and the agitated congregation left the chapel respectfully. Peto and his friend were summoned before the council. 'You deserve to be sewn in a sack and thrown into the Thames,' said one. 'We fear nothing,' answered Elstow; 'the way to heaven is as short by water as by land.' *

Henry having thus made war on the partisans of the pope, turned to those of the Reformation. Like a child, he see-sawed to and fro, first on one side, then on the other; but his sport was a more terrible one, for every time he touched the ground the blood spurted forth.

At that time there were many Christians in England to whom the Roman worship brought no edification. Having procured Tyndale's translation of the Word of God, they felt that they possessed it not only for themselves but for others. They sought each other's company, and met together to read the Bible and receive spiritual graces from God. Several Christian assemblies of this kind had been formed in London, in garrets, in warehouses, schools and shops, and one of them was held in a warehouse in Bow ^{*} Tyndale, Treatises, p. 38. Stowe, Annals, 562.

Lane Among its frequenters was the son of a Gloucestershire knight, James Bainham, by name, a man well read in the classics, and a distinguished lawyer, respected by all for his piety and works of churity. To give advice freely to widows and orphans, to see justice done to the oppressed.

to aid poor students protect pious per ons, and visit the prisons, were his daily occupations 'He was an earnest render of Scripture, and mightily addicted to prayer When he entered the meeting every one could see that his countenance expressed a calm toy, but for a month past his Bow Lane friends noticed him to be agitated and cast down, and heard him sighing heavily. The cause was this Sometime before (in 1531) when he was engaged about his business in the Middle Temple this 'model of lawvers' had been arrested by order of More, who was still chancellor, and taken like a criminal to the house of the celebrated hu manist at Chelsea Sir Thomas, quite distressed at seeing a man so distinguished leave the Church of Rome, had em ployed all his eloquence to bring him back, but finding his efforts useless he had ordered Bambam to be taken into his gurden and tied to 'the tree of truth' There the chancel lor whipped him, or caused him to be whipped we adopt the latter version, which is more probable † Buth un has ing refused to give the names of the gentlemen of the I'emple tainted with herest, he was taken to the Tower 'Put him on the rack,' cried the learned chancellor, now become a functical persecutor. The order was obeyed in his presence The arms and legs of the unfortunate protestant were seized by the instrument and pulled in opposite direc tions, his limbs were dislocated, and he went lame out of the torture-chamber I Sir Thomas had broken his victim's limbs, but not his courage, and accordingly when Bunham was summoned

^{*}Foxe Acts iv p 697 t Both Strype (Hemorials t p 35) and Foxe (Acts iv p 893) say, and

wh pped h m; but More de sel st. t Sir Thomas More being present himself til in a manner be had lamed him - Foxe, Acts iv p 698 before the Bishop of London, he went to the palaee rejoieing to have to eonfess his Master once more. 'Do you believe in purgatory?' said Stokesley to him sternly. Bainham answered: 'The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin.'* Do you believe that we ought to eall upon the saints to pray for us?' He again answered: 'If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father — Jesus Christ the righteous.'†

A man who answered only by texts from Seripture was embarrassing. More and Stokesley made the most alluring promises, and no means were spared to bend him. ‡ Before long they resorted to more serious representations: 'The arms of the Church your mother are still open to you,' they said; 'but if you continue stubborn, they will close against you forever. It is now or never!' For a whole month the bishop and the chancellor persevered in their entreaties; Bainham replied: 'My faith is that of the holy Church.' Hearing these words, Foxford, the bishop's secretary, took out a paper. 'Here is the abjuration,' he said; 'read it over.' Bainham began: 'I voluntarily, as a true penitent returned from my heresy, utterly abjure'. . . At these words he stopped, and glancing over what followed, he continued: 'No, these articles are not heretical, and I cannot retract them.' Other springs were now set in motion to shake Bainham. The prayers of his friends, the threats of his enemies, especially the thought of his wife, whom he loved, and who would be left alone in destitution, exposed to the anger of the world: these things troubled his soul. lle lost sight of the narrow path he ought to follow, and five days later he read his abjuration with a faint voice. But he had hardly got to the end before he burst into tears, and said, struggling with his emotion: 'I reserve the doctrines.' He consented to remain in the Roman Church, still preserving his evangelical faith. But this was not what the bishop and his officers meant. 'Kiss that book,' they said to him threateningly. Bainham, like one stunned, kissed the book, that was the sign, the adjuration was looked upon as complete. He was condemned to pay a fine of twenty pounds sterling, and to do penance at St Paul's Cross,

^{* 1} John i. 7. † Ibid. ii. 1. † Foxe, Acts, iv. p. 700.

After that he was set at bberty, on the 17th of Tebruary Bunham returned to the midst of his brethren they looked sorrowfully at him, but did not repreach him with That was quite unnecessary. The worm of remore was preving on him, he abhorred the fatal ki-s by which he had sealed his fall, his conscience was never quiet, he could neither ent nor sleep, and trembled at the thought of death. At one time he would hide his naguish and stiffe it within his breast, at another his grief would break forth, and he would try to relieve his pain by grouns of sorrow The thought of appearing before the tribunal of God made him funt. The restoration of conscience to all its rights was the foremost work of the Reformation Luther, Calvin, and an endless number of more obscure reformers had reached the haven of safety through the midst of such tempests 'A tragedy was being acted in all protestant souls,' says a writer who does not belong to the Reformation - the eternal tragedy of conscience Bainham felt that the only means of recevering peace was to accuse himself openly before God and man Taking Tyndale's New Testament in his hand, which was at once his joy and his strength, he went to St Austin's church, sat down quietly in the midst of the congregation, and then at a certain moment stood up and said 'I have denied tie . He could not continue for his tears * On recovering, he said 'If I were not to return again to the doctrine I have abjured, this word of Scripture would condemn me both body and soul at the day of judgment' And he lifted up the New Testament before all the congregation 'O my friends,' he continued, 'rather die than sin as I have done The fires of hell have consumed me, and I would . Stood up there before the people in his pew with weeping tears' not feel them again for all the gold and glory of the world.'*

⁻Foxe, Acts or p 702

Then his enemies seized him again and shut him up in the bishop's eoal-eellar, where, after putting him in irons, they left him for four days. He was afterwards taken to the Tower, where he was seourged every day for a fortnight, and at last eondemned as a relapsed heretic.

On the eve of the execution four distinguished men, one of whom was Latimer, were dining together in London. It was eommonly reported that Bainham was to be put to death for saying that Thomas à Beeket was a traitor worthy of hell. 'Is it worth a man's while to sacrifice his life for such a trifle?' said the four friends. 'Let us go to Newgate and save him if possible.' They were taken along several gloomy passages, and found themselves at last in the presenee of a man, sitting on a little straw, holding a book in one hand and a candle in the other.† He was reading; it was Bainham. Latimer drew near him: 'Take eare,' he said, 'that no vainglory make you sacrifiee your life for motives which are not worth the eost.' 'I am condemned,' answered Bainham, 'for trusting in Seripture and rejecting purgatory, masses, and meritorious works.' - 'I aeknowledge that for such truths a man must be ready to die.' Bainham was ready; and yet he burst into tears. 'Why do you weep?' asked Latimer. 'I have a wife,' answered the prisoner, 'the best that man ever had. A widow, destitute of everything and without a supporter, everybody will point at her and say, That is the heretie's wife.' Latimer and his friends tried to eonsole him, and then they departed from the gloomy dungeon.

The next day (30th of April, 1532) Bainham was taken to the scaffold. Soldiers on horseback surrounded the pile: Master Pave, the city clerk, directed the execution. Bainham, after a prayer, rose up, embraced the stake, and was fastened to it with a chain. 'Good people,' he said to the persons who stood round him, 'I die for having said it is lawful for every min and womin to have God's book. I die for having said that the true key of heaven is not that of the Bishon of Rome, but the preaching of the Gospel I die for having said that there is no other purgatory than the cross of Chilst, with its consequent persecutions and afflictions' - 'Thou hest, thou heretic,' exclaimed Pave, 'thou hast denied the blessed sacrament of the altar' - 'I do not deny the sacrament of Christ's body,' resumed Bainham, 'but I do deny your idolatry to a piece of brend' -'Light the fire,' shouted Pave The executioners set fire to a trun of gunpowder, and as the flame approached him, Bainham lifted up his eyes towards heaven, and said to the town clerk 'God foreive thee! the Lord forgive Sir pray for me, all good people!' Thomas More The arms and legs of the martyr were soon consumed, and thinking only how to glorify his Saviour, he exclaimed Behold 1 you look for miracles, you may see one here, for in this fire I feel no more pain than if I were on a bed of roses' * The primitive Church hardly had a more glorious marter

^{* &#}x27;He would not feel such a hell again as he did feel.' - Ibid.

[†] Strype, Annals, i. p. 372. † Ibid.

Pave had Bambam's image continually before his eyes, and his last prayer rang day and night in his heart. In the garret of his house, far removed from noise, he had fitted up a kind of orstory, where he had placed a crucifx, before which he used to pray and shed bitter tears. † He abhorred limited his mad, he suffered indescribable sorrow, and struggled under great inguish. The dying Bambam had said to him. 'May God show thee more mercy than thou best shown to me." But Praye could not believe in mercy he saw no other remedy for his despurithan death. About a year after Bambam's martyrdom, he sent his domestics and clerks on different errands, keeping only one ervant midd in the house. As soon as his wife, had gone to church, he went out himself, bought a rope, and hiding it carefully ander his gown, weet up into the garret. He stopped before the crucifix, and began to groun and weep. The servant ran upstairs. 'Take this rusty sword,' he said, 'clean it well, and do not disturb me.' She had scarcely left the room when he fastened the rope to a beam and hanged himself.

The maid, hearing no sound, again grew alarmed, went up to the garret, and seeing her master hanging, was struck with terror. She ran crying to the church to fetch her mistress home; * but it was too late; the wretched man could not be recalled to life.

If the deaths of the martyrs plunged the wicked into the depths of despair, it often gave life to earnest souls. The crowd which had surrounded the scaffold of these men of God dispersed in profound emotion. Some returned to their fields, others to their shops or workrooms; but the pale faces of the martyrs followed them, their words sounded in their souls, their virtues softened many hearts most averse to the Gospel. 'Oh! that I were with Bainham!' exclaimed one. † These people continued for some time to frequent the Romish churches, but ere long their consciences eried aloud to them: 'It is Christ alone who saves us;' and they forsook the rites in which they could find no consolation. They courted solitude; they procured the writings of Wiekliffe and of Tyndale, and especially the New Testament, which they read in secret, and if any one came near, hid them hastily under a bed, at the bottom of a ehest, in the hollow of a tree, or even under stones, until the enemy had retired and they could take the books up again. Then they whispered about them to their neighbors, and often had the joy of meeting with men who thought as they did. A surprising change was taking place. While the priests were loudly chanting in the eathedrals the praises of the saints, of the Virgin, and of the Corpus Domini, the people were whispering together about the Saviour meek and lowly in heart. All over England was heard a still, small voice such as Elijah heard, and on hearing it wrapped his face in his mantle and stood silent and motionless, because the Lord was there Great changes were about to take place

^{*} Foxe, Acts, iv. p. 706.

It is not without reason that we describe in some detail in this history the lives and deaths of these evangelical men We desire to show that the Church in England, as in all the world, is not a mere ecclesiastical hierarchy, in which prelates exerci e dominion over the inheritance of the Lord; nor a confused assemblage of men, whose spirit imagines about religion all kinds of doctrines contrary to the revela tion from heaven, and whose profession of futh comprehends all the opinions that are found in the nation, from catholic scholasticism to pantheistic materialism. The Church of God, raised above the human systems of the superstitious and the incredulous riske, is the assembly of those who hy a hving faith are partakers of the righteou ness of Chri t and of the new life of which the Holy Ghost is the creator - of those in whom selfishness is vanquished, and who give themselves up to the Saviour to achieve with their brethren the conquest of the world Such is the true Church of God, very different at will be seen, from all those invented by man

CHAPTER XVI

THE NEW PRIMATE OF ALL ENGLAND

(Fessuary 1333 to Blanch 1683)

A MAY who for more than thety years had had an important voice in the management of the ecclusional affurs of the langdom now drappeared from the scene to give place to the most influential of the reformers of England Warham, Archiushop of Canterbury, a learned canonist, a shilful politician, a dexterous courtier, and the friend of letters, had made it his special work to exalt the sacerdotal prerogative, and to that end had had recourse to the surest means, by fighting against the idleness, ignorance, and corruption of the priests. He had even hoped for a reform of the clergy, provided it emanated from episeopal authority. But when he saw another reformation accomplished in the name of God's Word, without priests and against the priests, he turned round and began to persecute the reformers, and to strengthen the papal authority. Alarmed at the proceedings of the Commons, he sent for three notaries, on the 24th February, 1532, and protested in their presence against every act of parliament derogatory to the authority of the Roman pontiff.*

On the 22d August of the same year, just at the very height of the crisis, 'the second pope,' as he was sometimes called, was removed from his see by death, and the people anxiously wondered who would be appointed to his vacant place.

The choice was important, for the nomination might be the symbol of what the Church of England was to be. Would he be a prelate devoted to the pope, like Fisher; or a catholic favorable to the divorce, like Gardiner; or a moderate evangelical attached to the king, like Cranmer; or a decided reformer, like Latimer? At this moment, when a new era was beginning for Christendom, it was of eonsequence to know whom England would take for her guide; whether she would march at the head of civilization, like Germany, or bring up the rear, like Spain and Italy. The king did not favor either extreme, and hesitated between the two other eandidates. All things considered, he had no eonfidence in such men as Longland and Gardiner, who might promise and not fulfil. He wanted somebody less political than the one and less fanatical than the other, - a man separated from the pope on principle, and not merely for convenience.

^{*} Protestamur quod nolumus alicui statuto edito in derogationem Romani pontificis consentire.' — Wilkins, Concilia, iii. p. 746.

Cranmer, after passing a few months at Rome, had returned to England* Then, departing again for Germany on a mission from the king he had arrived at Nuremburg, prob ably in the autumn of 1531 He examined with interest that ancient city, - its beautiful churches, its monumental fountains, its old and picturesque castle, but there was something that attracted him more than all these things Being present at the celebration of the sacriment, he noticed that while the priest was muttering the Gospel in Latin at the altar, the deacon went up into the pulpit, and read it aloud in German ! He saw that, although there was still some appearance of catholicism in Nuremburg in reality the Gospel reigned there. One man's name often came up in the conversations he had with the principal persons in the city They spoke to him of Osiander as of a man of great eloquence ! Cranmer followed the crowd which poured into the church of St Lawrence, and was struck with the minister's talent and piety. He sought his acquaintance, and the two doctors had many a conversation together, either in Crammer's house or in Osignder's study, and the German divine, being gamed over to the cause of Henry VIII., published shortly after a book on unlawful marriages

Cranmer, who had an affectionate heart, loved to join the simple meals, the pious devotions, and the friendly conversations at Osiander's house he was soon almost like a member of the family. But, although his intimacy with the Nuremburg pa.tor grew stronger every day, he did not adopt all his opinions. When Ovander told him that he must substitute the authority of Holy Scripturo for that of Rome, Crumer gave his full assent, but the Englishman perceived that the German international views different from Luther's on the particulation of the strater. (What justifies

^{*} There is a letter of his dated from Hampton Court, 12th June, 1631 † Cotton Ms., Vitell us bk xxl p 54

t Con wond it a prin r bus civitat a facu ta sun - Camerarius Ul 14 na fir ; 15

us,' he said, 'is not the imputation of the merits of Christ by faith, but the inward communication of his righteousness.' 'Christ,' said Cranmer, 'has paid the price of our redemption by the sacrifice of his body and the fulfilling of the law; and if we heartily believe in this work which he has perfected, we are justified. The justified man must be sanctified, and must work good works; but it is not the works that justify him.'* The conversation of the two friends turned also upon the Lord's Supper. Whatever may have been Cranmer's doctrine before, he soon came (like Calvin) to place the real presence of Christ not in the wafer which the priest holds between his fingers, but in the heart of the believer.'

In June, 1532, the protestant and Roman-catholic delegates arrived at Naremburg to arrange the religious peace. The celibacy of the clergy immediately became one of the points disensed. It appeared to the chiefs of the papacy impossible to concede that article. 'Rather abolish the mass entirely,' exclaimed the Archbishop of Mayence, 'than permit the marriage of priests.' 'They must come to that at last,' said Luther; 'God is overthrowing the mighty from their seat.'‡ Cranmer was of his opinion. 'It is better,' he said, 'for a minister to have his own wife than to have other men's wives, like the priests.' § 'What services may not a pions wife do for the pastor her husband,' added Osiander, 'among the poor, the women, and the children?'

Cranmer had lost his wife at Cambridge, and his heart yearned for affection. Osiander's family presented him a touching picture of domestic happiness. One of its members was a niece of Osiander's wife. Cranmer, charmed with her piety and candor, and hoping to find in her the ^{* &#}x27;It exclude them from the office of justifying.' — Homily of Salvation. Cranmer, Works, ii. p. 129 (Parker Soc.).

^{† &#}x27;Christ is corporally in heaven and spiritually in his lively members.' - Cranmer, On the Lord's Supper, p. 33.

[‡] Lutheri Opp. xxii. p. 1808.

[§] Cranmer, Works, p. 219 (Parker Soc.).

[&]quot; Hec erat neptis uxoris Osiandri.' - Godwin, Annales Angl. p. 167.

virtuous woman who is a crown to her husband, asked her hand and matried her, not heeding the unliwful command of those who 'forbid to marry' "

Still Cranmer did not forget his mission The King of England was desirous of forming an alliance with the German protestants, and his agent made overtures to the electord prince of Saxony, 'First of all,' answered the pious John Frederick, 'the two kings (of France and England) must be in harmony with us as to the articles of faith't The alliance failed, but at the same moment, affairs took an unexpected turn The emperor, who was marching agunst Solyman, desired the help of the King of England, and Granvelle had some talk with Cranmer on the subject. The latter was procuring carriages, horses, honts, tents, and other things necessary for his journey, with the intention of rejoining the emperor at Lintz, when a courier suddenly brought him orders to return to London! It was very vexatious Just as he was on the point of concluding an alliance with the nephew of Queen Catherine, in which the matter of the divorce would consequently be arranged, Henry's envoy had to give up everything He wondered anxiously what could be the motive of this sudden and extraordinary recall The letters of his friends explained it

Warham was dead, and the king thought of Cranmer to succeed him as Archibishop of Canterbury and primare of all England. The reformer was greatly moved "Alas," he exclaimed, "no man has ever desired a hishopic less than myself $ If I accept it, I must resign the delights of study and the calm sweetness of an obscure condition." I Knowing Henry's dominaering character and his peculiar religious principles, Cranmer thought that with him the reformation of England was impossible. He saw himself exposed to disputes without end, there would be no more peace for the most peaceable of men. A brilliant career, an exalted position—he was terrified. 'My conscience,' he said, 'rebels against this call. Wretch that I mu! I see nothing but troubles and 'conflicts and insurmountable dangers in my path.'

^{* 1} Timothy it 3.

[†] Secken lorf Wist. Lutheranisms, 1532.

Cranmer Pemains p. 232, Cranmer, Remains p. 232.

Upon mature reflection, Cranmer thought he might get out of his difficulty by gaining time, hoping that the king, who did not like delays, would doubtless give the see to another.* He sent an answer that important affairs prevented his return to England. Solyman had retreated before the emperor; the latter had determined to pass through Italy to Spain, and had appointed a meeting with the pope at Piaeenza or Genoa. Henry's ambassanor thought it his duty to neutralize the fatal consequences of this interview; and Charles having left Vienna on the 4th of October, Cranmer followed him two days later. The exalted dignity that awaited him oppressed him like the nightmare. On his road he found neither inhabitants nor food, and hay was his only bed.† Sometimes he erossed battle-fields covered with the carcasses of Turks and Christians. A comet appeared in the east foreboding some tragic event. Many declared they had seen a flaming sword in the heavens. 'These strange signs,' he wrote to Henry, 'announce some grent mutation.' 1 Cranmer and his colleagues could not gain the pope to their side. Several months passed away, during which men's minds became so excited, that the eardinals forgot all decorum. 'Alas l' says a catholic historian, 'all the time this affair continued, they went to the consistory as if they were going to a play.' § Charles V. prevailed at last.

Then came that famous interview (October 1532) between the kings of France and England at Calais and Boulogne, ^{* &#}x27;Thinking that he would be forgetful of me in the meantime.' - Cranmer, Remains, p. 216.

^{† &#}x27;I found in no town, man, woman, nor child, meat, drink, nor bedding.' — Cranmer, Remains, p. 223.

[‡] Ibid, p. 225.

[&]amp; Le Grand, Histoire du Divorce, i. p. 229.

which we have described elsewhere, * and the two princes having come to an understanding, Henry thought seriously of bringing the matter to an end Did he marry Anne Bolevn at that time? Everything seems to point in that direction, and if we are to believe some of the most trustworthy historians, the marriage took place in the following month of November † Perhaps it was quite a private wedding, the legal formalities not being completed. Contemporary testimony is at variance, and the point has not been cleared up In any case, Henry determined to wait before making the marriage public. The conference the pope was about to hold at Boloma with the ambassador of Francis I , the probability of an interview between the king of France and the pontiff at Marseilles, which might give a new aspect to the creat affair, and perhaps the desire to confer about it with Cranmer, for whom he destined the see of Canterbury - seem to have induced the prince to defer the ceremony for a few weeks He lost no time, however, in summoning the future primate to London A report having circulated in Italy, that the king was

A report having circulated in Italy, that the king was about to place Crumer at the head of the English Church, the imperial court treated him with unusual consideration Charles V, his ministers, and the foreign ambassadors, said openly that such a man richly deserved to hold a high place in the favor and government of the king his master I About the middle of November, the emperor gave Crammer his farewell audience, and the latter arrived in England not long after. Not wishing to act in opposition to general range and clerical opinion, he thought it more prudent to leave his wife for a time with Osrander. He sent for her somewhat later, but she was never presented at court. It was not necessary, and it might only have embarrassed the pious German lady.

^{*} Hutory of the Reformation of the Sixteenth Century tom ii bk ii ch.

[†] This is the date given by Hall, Chromeles, fol 200, Hohnshed, Chromeles, in p 627 Stype Cramer's Men p 16, Collyers, ii p 71 Others heatate between November and January (1533), Burnet, i. p. 121; Herbert, p 360 Renger p 336, &c.

^{? &#}x27;They judge him a man right worthy to be high in favor and authority with his prince - State Papers (Henry 1 III) vii p 201

As soon as Cranmer reached London, he waited upon the king, being quite engrossed in thinking of what was about to take place between his sovereign and himself. Henry went straight to the point: he told him that he had nominated him Archbishop of Canterbury. Cranmer objected, but the king would take no refusal. In vain did the divine urge his reasons: the monarch was firm. It was no slight matter to contend with Henry VIII. Cranmer was alarmed at the effect produced by his resistance. 'Your Highness,' he said, 'I most humbly implore your Grace's pardon.' *

When he left the king, he harried off to his friends, particularly to Cromwell. The burden which Henry was laying upon him seemed more insupportable than ever. Knowing how difficult it is to resist a prince of despotie character, he foresaw conflicts and perhaps compromises, which would embitter his life, and he could not make up his mind to sacrifice his happiness to the imperious will of the monarch. 'Take care,' said his friends, 'it is as dangerous to refuse a favor from so absolute a prince as to insult him.' But Cranmer's conscience was concerned in his refusal. 'I feel something within me,' he said, † 'which rebels against the supremaey of the pope, and all the superstitions to which I should have to submit as primate of England. No, I will not be a bishop!' He might sacrifice his repose and his happiness, expose himself to painful struggles; but to recognize the pope and submit to his jurisdiction was an insurmountable obstacle. His friends shook their heads. 'Your nolo episcopari,' they said, 'will not hold against our master's volo te episcopum esse. ! And after all, what is it? Permitting the king to place you at the summit of honors and power. . . You refuse all that men desire? "I

^{*} Foxe, Acts, viii. p. 66.

^{1 &#}x27;Aliquid intus'

^{$ &#}x27;1 am unwilling to be made a bishop.' 'I desire you to be a bishop.' - Fuller, Eccl. Hist. bk. v. p. 184.

120 would sooner forfest my life,' answered Cranmer, thun do anything against my conscience to gratify my ambition 'e Henry vexed at these delays, agun summoned Grunmer to the palace, and hade him speak without fear 'If I accept this office, replied that sincere man, I must receive it from the hands of the pope, and this my conscience will not per-. Neither the pope nor any other foreign prince has authority in this realm ' Such a reason as this bad great weight with Henry He was silent for a lit tle while as if reflecting ‡ and then said to Cranmer 'Can you prove what you have just said?' 'Certainly I can,' answered the doctor, 'Holy Scripture and the Fathers sup port the supreme authority of kings in their kingdoms, and thus prove the clums of the popo to be a miserable usurpa-1108

Such a statement bound Henry to take another step in his reforms. As he had not yet thought of establishing hishops and archbishops without the pope, he sent for some learned lawyers, and a ked them how he could confer the episcopal dignity on Crunmer without wounding the conscience of the future primate The lawyers proposed, that as Cranmer refused to submit to the Roman primacy, some one should be sent to Rome to do in his stead all that the law required 'Let another do it if he likes,' said Cranmer, 'but super antmam suam, at the risk of his soul As for me I declare I will not acknowledge the authority of the pope any further than it agrees with the Word of God, and that I reservo the right of speaking against him and of attacking his errors'

The lawyers found bad precedents to justify a bad meas-'Archbishop Warham,' they said, 'while preserving the advantages he derived from the state, prote ted against everything the state did prejudicial to Rome If the deceased archivehop preserved the rights of the papary, why should not the new one preserve those of the kingdom? . .

^{*} Foxe, Acts viii p. 66

[†] Cranmer Remains p 223

Besides (they added) the pope knows very well that when they make oath to him, every bishop does so salvo ordine meo, without prejudice to the rights of his order.'*

It having been conceded that in the act of consecration the rights of the word of God' should be reserved, Cranmer consented to become primate of England. Henry VIII., who was less advanced in practice than in theory, all the same demanded of Clement VII. the bulls necessary for the inauguration of the new archbishop. The pontiff only too happy to have still something to say to England, hastened to dispatch them, addressing them directly to Cranmer himself. But the latter who would accept nothing from the pope, sent them to the king, declaring that he would not receive his appointment from Rome.†

By accepting the call that was addressed to him, Cranmer meant to break with the order of the Middle Ages, and reestablish, so far as was in his power, that of the Gospel. But he would not conceal his intentions: all must be done in the light of day. On the 30th of March, 1533, he summoned to the chapter-house of Westminster Watkins, the king's prothonotary, with other dignitaries of the Church and State. On entering, he took up a paper, and read aloud and distinctly: 'I, Thomas, Archbishop of Canterbury, protest openly, publicly, and expressly,† that I will not bind myself by oath to anything contrary to the law of God, the rights of the King of England, and the laws of the realm; and that I will not be bound in aught that concerns liberty of speech, the government of the Church of England, and the reformation of all things that may seem to be necessary to be reformed therein. If my representative with the pope has taken in my name an oath contrary to my duty, I declare that he has done so without my knowledge, and that the said outh shall be null. I desire this protest to be repeated it each period of the present erromony.  Then turning to the prothonolary 'I beg you to prepare as many copies as may be necessary of this my protest.

^{*} Bossuet makes this remark when speaking of Cranmer's oath. — Histoire des Variations, liv. vii. p. 11.

^{* &#}x27;Quas bullas obtulit tum regi.' Lambeth MS. No. 1136.

^{† &#}x27;Palam et publice et expresse protestor.' — Wilkins, Concilia. iii. p. 757

Cranmer left the ebupter bouse and entered the abbey, where the clergy and a numerous crowd awarded him. He was not satisfied with once declaring his independence of the papacy, he desired to do it several times. The greater the antiquity of the Romish power in Britain, the more he felt the necessity of proclaiming the supremacy of the divine Word. Having put on his sacredictal robes, Cranmer stood at the top of the steps of the high altar, and said, turning towards the assembly. 'I declare that I take the oath required of me only under the reserve contained in the protest I have made this day in the chapter house.' Then heading his knees before the ultar, he read it a second time in presence of the bishops, priests, and people, I after which the bishops of Lincoln, Exeter, and St. Asaph consecrated him to the episcopate.

The archbishop, standing before the altar, prepared to receive the palhum, but first be had a duty to fulfil if he excriticed his repose, he did not intend to sacrifice his convictions. For the third time be took up the protest, and again read it ‡ before the immense crowd that filled the cathedral §. The accustomed order of the ceremony having leen twice interrupted by an extraordinary declaration, all were at liberty to praise or blame the action of the prelate as they pleased. Crainier liaving thus three published his reserves, read at last the oath which the Archbishops of Canterbury were accustomed to make to St. Peter and to the holy apostohe Charch of Rome, with the usual protest. salso nee ordine (without prejuduce to my order)

^{*} Quas protestationes in omn bus classifis et sentent sid ctorum jura mentorum repet tas et rec tatas volo — Wilkins Gincilia i 1 p. 767

[†] Eandem sedulum perl g t - Lambeth MS No. 2106

Qua protestat one per cundem reserve 1 et mu n tert o facia - 16 1 in the presence of so much people as the church could hold - Card.

Pole

Cranmer's triple protest was an act of Christian decision. Some time afterwards he said: 'I made that protest in good faith: I always loved simplicity and hated falseness.' But it was wrong of him to use after it the formula ordinarily employed in consecrations. Doubtless it was nothing more than a form; a form that was imposed by the king, and Cranmer protested against all the bad it might contain: still 'it is necessary to walk consistently in all things,' as Calvin says; * and we here meet with one of those weaknesses which sometimes appear in the life of the pious reformer of England. He ought at no price to have made oath to the pope; that oath was a stain which in some measure tinged the whole of his episcopate. Yet if we were to condemn him severely, we should be forgetting that striking truth - in many things we offend all. Cranmer was the first in the breach, and he has claims to the consideration of those who are comfortably established in a position gained by him with so much suffering. The energy with which he thrice proclaimed his independence deserves our admiration. Nevertheless all weakness is a fault, and when that fault is committed in high station it may lead to fatal consequences. The sanctity of the oath taken by churchmen was compromised by Cranmer's act, and we have seen in later times other divines secretly communing with Romish doctrines while appearing to reject popery. There have sometimes been disguised papists in the protestant Church of England.

After the ceremony the new archbishop returned to his place at Lambeth. From that hour this patron of letters, a scholar himself, a truly pious man, a distinguished preacher, and of indefatigable industry, never ceased to labor for the good of the Church. He was able to introduce Christian faith into many hearts, and sometimes to defend it against the king's ill-humor. He constantly endeavored to spread around him moderation, charity, truth, piety, and peace. When Cranmer became primate of all England, on the

^{* &#}x27;Il faut marcher rondement en toutes choses.'

30th of March, 1533, in that cathedral of Westminster, the burial place of kings, the papal order was interred, and it might be foreseen that the apostolic order would be revived England pre erved episcopacy because it was the form under which she had received Chri tianity in the second century, and because she thought it necessary for the functions of in spection and government in the Church But she rejected that Roman superstition which makes hishops the sole successors of the apostles, and maintains that they are invested with an indelible character and a spiritual power which no other minister possesses * 'Most assuredly,' said Crimmer, 'at the beginning of the religion of Christ, bishops and presbyters (priests) were not two things, but one only 'f He declared that a bishop was not necessary to make a pastor, that not only presbyters possessed this right, but 'the neonle also by their election 'Before there were Christian princes, it was the people, he said, 'who generally elected the bishops and priests' Cranmer was not the only man who professed these principles, which make of the episco-palian and the presbyterian constitution two varieties, hasing many things in common The most venerable fathers of the Anglican Church - Pillington, Coverdale, Whitgill, Fulke, Tyndale, Jewel Bradford, Becon and others -have acknowledged the identity of bishops and presbyters By the Reformation England belongs not to the pupistical sys tem of episcopacy, but to the evangelical system A public act which would bring back that Church to her holy origin, would be a source of great prosperity to her

The great reformers of England did not separate from Rome only, but also from the semi-catholicism that was in tended to be substituted for it. To them the spirit and the life were in the ministry of the Word of God, and not in rites and ceremonies. By their noble example they have called all men of God to follow them

^{*} Cone I um Tr dentinum Sess o prima

[†] Resolutions of certain bishops Burnet, Records bk ill. art. 21; Cranmer Remains p 117

CHAPTER XVII.

QUEEN CATHERINE DESCENDS FROM THE THRONE, AND QUEEN ANNE BOLEYN ASCENDS IT.

(NOVEMBER 1532 TO JULY 1558.)

Cranmer was on the archiepiscopal throne: if Anne Boleyn were now to take her seat on the royal throne by the side of Henry, it was the pope's opinion that everything would be lost. Clement recurred once more to his favorite suggestion of bigamy, already advised by him in 1528 and 1530. True, this suggestion could not be acceptable either to Henry or to Charles V., but that made it all the better in the eyes of the pontiff: he would then have the appearance of assenting to the king's plans without running the least risk of seeing them realized. 'Rather than do what his Majesty asks,' he said to one of the English envoys, 'I would prefer granting him the necessary dispensation to have two wives: that would be a smaller scandal.'*

The tenacity with which the pope advised Henry again and again to commit the crime of bigamy has not prevented the most illustrious advocates of catholicism from exclaiming that 'to have two wives at once is a mystery of iniquity, of which there is no example in Christendom.'† A singular assertion after a cardinal and then a pope had on several occasions advised what they called 'a mystery of iniquity.' Again, for the third time, the king refused a remedy that was worse than the disease.

The pope wished at any price to prevent Rome from losing England; and turning to the other side, he resolved to try to gain over Charles V. and prevail upon him not to oppose the divorce In order to succeed, Clement determined to undertake a journey to Bologia in the worst season of the year. He started on the 18th of November with six cardinals and a certain number of attendants, and took twenty days to reach that city by way of Perugia Most of his officers had done everything to dissuade him from this punful expedition, but in vain. The rain fell in torrents, the rivers were swollen and unfordable, the roads muddy and broken up, the males sank of fatigue one after another, the couriers who preceded him solicited the pope to travel on foot and at last his Hohness's favorite mule broke its leg It mattered not he mu t oppose the Reformation of England the poor pontiff, already sick, had but this one idea But the discomforts of the journey increased, the pope often arrived at mas where there was no bed, and had to sleep among the straw * At last he reached Bologna on the 7th of December, but in such a plight that, notwithstanding his love for ceremonies, he entered the city furtively

^{* &#}x27;Multo, minus scandalosum fuisset, dispensare cum Majestate vestra super duabus uxoribus.' — Record Office MS.

t Bossuet, Hist. des Variations, liv. vi.

Another disappointment awaited him. The Cardinal of Ancana died, the most influential member of the Sacred College, and on whom Clement relied to gain over the emperor, who greatly respected him. But this did not cool the pontiff's zeal 'I am thoroughly decided to please the king in this great matter,' I he said to Henry's envoys, and added 'To have univer-al concord between all the princes of Christiandom, I would give a joint of my haid' ! In first Clement set to work and went so furns to tell Charles that, according to the theologyans, the pope had no right to grant a dispensation for a matrings between brother and sweet, but the emperor was immorable. The pope than proposed a t Utterly resolve to do pleasure to your Highness."- Benet to Henry VIII, State Papers pp. 401, 402.

^{*} Compelled to be in the straw '- State P spers (Henry VIII) part vii p. 394

t 'He would it had cost him a joint of his hand '- Ibid truce of three or four years between Henry, Francis, and Charles, during which he would convoke a general council, to whom he would remit the whole affair. Francis informed Henry that all this was nothing but a trick.*

The king, convinced that the pope was trifling with him, no longer hesitated to follow the course which the interests of his people and his own happiness seemed to point out. He determined that Anne Boleyn should be his wife and Queen of England also. It was now that, according to the second hypothesis, the marriage took place. Cranmer states in a letter written on the 17th of June, 1533, that he did not perform the ceremony, that he did not hear of it until a fortnight after, and that it was celebrated 'much about Saint Paul's day last † (25th of January, 1533). Which date must we accept: this, or the 15th of November, given by Hall, Hollinshed, Burnet, and others? Cranmer's language is not precise enough to settle the question.

Whatever may have been the date of the marriage — November or January — it became the universal topic of conversation in the beginning of 1533; people did not speak of it publicly, but in private, some attacking and others defending it. If the members of the Romish party circulated ridiculous stories and outrageous calumnics against Anne, the members of the national party replied that the purity of her life, her moderation, her chastity, her mildness, her discretion, her noble and exalted parentage, her pleasing manners, and (they added somewhat later) her fitness to give a successor to the crown of England, made her worthy of the royal favor. † Men may have gone too far in their reproaches as well as in their eulogies.

This important step on the part of Henry VIII. was accompanied with an explosion of murmurs against Clement VII. 'The pope,' he said, 'wanders from the path of the Redeemer, who was obedient in this world to princes. What I must a prince submit to the arrogance of a human being whom God has not under him? Most a king humble himself before that man above whom he stands by the will of God? No that would be a perversion of the order God has established ' This is what Henry represented to Francas through Lord Rochford. * but the words did not touch the King of France, for the emperor was just then making several concessions to him, and the evangelicals of Paris were annoving him From that hour the cordial feeling between the two monarchs gradually decreased England turned her eyes more and more towards the Gosnel, and France towards Rome Just at the time when Anne Boleyn was about to reign in the palaces of Whitehall and Windsor, Catherine de Medicis was entering those of St. German and Fontamebleau. The contrast between the two nations became daily more distinct and striking Lagland was advancing towards liberty, and I'rance towards the dragonnades.

^{* &#}x27;Your Grace should give no credence thereto, for it is but dissimulation.'—Ibid. p. 422.

[†] Cranmer, Remains, p. 246.

[†] The purity of her life, her constant virginity.' — Burnet, Records, iii. p. 64; see, also, Wyatt, Memoirs of Anne Boleyn, p. 437.

The divorce between Rome and Whitehall soon became manifest. A brief of Clement VII posted in February on the doors of all the churches in Flanders, in the states of of the king's enemy, and as near to Fugland as possible, attracted a great number of renders † 'What shall we do?' said the the pontiff to Henry 'Shall we neglect thy soils safety? . We exhort thee, our son, under pun of excommunication, to restore Queen Culherine to the royal honors which are due to her, to colubit with her, and to cease to associate publicly with Anne, and that within a month from the day on which this brief shall be presented to thee. Otherwise, when the said term shall have clapsed, we pronounce thee and the said Anne to be 1910 facto excommunicate, and command all men to shun and avoid your presence.'* It would appear that this document, demanded by the imperialists, had been posted throughout Flanders without the pope's knowledge.†

[•] Henry s instructions to the Earl of Pochford are written in French probably that they might be shown to Francis — State papers vii Pf-429-431

¹ State Papers vii p. 421 A note mentions that the document cannot be found. It is evidently the brief given by Le Grand, Preuces do Degree, p. 559

A copy was immediately forwarded to the king by his agents. He was surprised and agitated, but believed at last that it was forged by his enemies. How could he imagine that the pope, just at the very time he was showing the king especial marks of his affection, would (even conditionally) have anathematized and isolated him in the midst of his people? Henry sent a copy of the document to Benct, his agent at Rome, and desired him to ascertain carefully whether it did really proceed from the pope or not.

Benet presented the document to Clement as a paper forwarded to him by his friends in Flanders. The latter was 'ashamed and in great perplexity,' wrote the envoy. He then read it again more attentively, stopped at certain passages, and seemed as if he were choking. Having come to the end, he expressed his surprise, and pretended that the copy differed from the original. 'There is one mistake in particular which almost chokes the pope every time it is mentioned, wrote Benet to Cromwell. This mistake was the including Queen Anne Boleyn in the censure, without giving her previous warning, which (they said) was contrary to all the commandments of God. Accordingly Dr. Benet received orders to bring up this mistake frequently in his audiences with the pope; and he did not fail to do so. At this moment, in which he was about to lose England, the pope was more uneasy at having committed an error of

^{* &#}x27;Te et ipsam Annam, excommunicationis pœna, innodatos declaramus.'—Le Grand, Preuves, p. 567.

[†] Granted by the pope at the suits of the imperials.'— State Papers, vii. p. 454.

^{‡ &#}x27;He can hardly believe it to be true rather than to be counterfeited.'
— Ibid. p. 421.

^{§ &#}x27;In derogation both of justice and the affection lately shown by his Holiness unto us.' — Ibid.

^{||} Ibid.

form with regard to Anne Boleyn than with having struck the monarch of a powerful kingdom with an interdet There is, besides, no doubt that he dictated the unhappy phrese himself

. Benet and his friends took advantage of the pope's vexation, and even increased it they communicated the brief to the dignitaries of the Church in Clement's hou chold, and the latter acknowledged that the document must be offensive to his Muesty of England, and that 'the pope was much to blame'. Benet transmitted the pontiff's errata to the king but it was too late the blow land taken effect. The indignant Henry was about to proceed osentationally to the very acts which Rome thrustened with her thunders.

Whilst the pope was hesitating England firmly pursued her emancipation. Parliament met on the 4th of February, and the boldest language was uttered. 'The people of England, in accord with their king' said eloquent speakers, have the right to deede supremely on all things both temporal and spiritual, † and certually the English possess intelligence enough for that. And yet, in spite of the probabilitions issued by so many of our princes we see built arriving every moment from Rome to regulate wills, marriages, divorces—everythings, in short. We propo e that hencefor ward these matters be decided solely before the national inbundals'. The law passed. Appeals, instead of being made to Rome, were to be made in the first instance to the bishop, then to the including in the king was intered to the cause, to the Upper Chamber of the eccle instinct

The king took immediate advantage of this law to inquire of Convocation whether the pope could nuthorize in man to marry his brother's widow. Out of sixty-six precent, and one hundred and innety-seven who voted by proxy, there were only ninetien in the Upper House who voted against the king. The opposition was stronger in the Lower House; but even this agreed with the other house in declaring that Pope Julius II. had exceeded his authority in giving Henry a dispensation, and that the marriage was consequently null from the very first.

^{*} State Papers vii p 454

[†] Statute against appeals, 24 Henry VIII cap 12, Collvers Ch. Ho-tore il.

Nothing remained now but to proceed to the divorce. On the 11th of April, two days before Easter, Cranmer, as archbishop, wrote a letter to the king, in which he set forth, that desiring to fill the office of Archbishop of Canterbury, 'according to the laws of God and Holy Church, for the relief of the grievances and infirmities of the people, God's subjects and yours in spiritual causes,' * he prayed his Majsty's favor for that office.† Cranmer did not decline the royal intervention, but he avoided confounding spiritual with temporal affairs.‡

Henry, who was doubtless waiting impatiently for this letter, was alarmed as he read the words 'according to the laws of God and Holy Church.' God and the Church.

. . . Well! but what of the king and the royal supremacy? The primate seemed to assert the right of acting proprio motu, and, while asking the king's favor, to be doing a simple act of courtesy.

. . Did the Church of England claim to take the pontiff's place and station, and leave the king aside?

. . That was not what Henry meant. Tired of the pretensions of the Pope of Rome, would he suffer a pope on a small scale at his side? He intended to be master in his own kingdom—master of everything. The letter must be modified, and this Henry intimated to Cranmer.

That day or the next after the one on which this letter had been written there was a great festival at court in honor of Anne Boleyn. 'Queen Anne that evening went in state to her closet openly as queen,' says Hall. It was probably during this festival that the king, taking the prelate aside, de ired him to suppress the inwelcome passage. The idea suggested by an eminent historian, that Cranmer sent both the letters together to Henry that be might choose which he would prefer, seems to me invalue sible. Cranmer, as it would appear, submitted, waiting for better days. On returning to Lambetb, he recopied his letter, omitting the words which had been pointed out. Not content with a Ling the kings faior, he desired his license, his authorization to proceed. He dated his second letter the same day, and sent it to his master, who was satisfied with it.

^{*} Wilkins, Concilia Mag. Britanniæ, iii. pp. 756-759. Rymer, Fædera, vi. p. 179.

[†] State Papers (Henry VIII.), i. p. 390.

^{‡ &#}x27;Your sufferance and grants.' - State Papers (Henry VIII.), i. p. 390.

This alone did not satisfy Henry in his reply to the archibishop, he marked still more strongly his intention not to have in England a primate independent of the crown 'Ye, therefore, duly recognizing that it becometh you not, being our subject, to enterprise any part of your said office without our license obtained so to do. In consideration of these things, albeit we, heing your king and sovereign, do recognize no superior upon earlibut only God, yet, because ye be under us, by God's calling and ours, the most principal minister of our spiritual jurisdiction, we will not refuse your humble request."

This language was clear. Henry VIII did not, however, claim the arbitrary authority to which the pope pretended human and divine laws were to be the supreme rule in Fig. land, but he, the king was to be their chief interpreter. Craimer must understand that "To these laws we, is a Christian king" wrote Henry, "have always heretofore submitted, and shall ever most obediently submit ourselves." The ecclesiastical system which Henry VIII established in Fighand in 1533 was not a free Church in a free State, and there is no create to surprised at it.

Cranmer, having received the royal license, set out for

[•] The two le ters are in the State I aper Office—ther are in Crahmer's handwring and appear to have been read, both of them by the king Our hypothes a touching these letters differs from that of Mr Froude Mat I and Mr 1, 440, State Paperer (Henry VIII) 1 po. 3.0.331

Mortloke manor to prepare the act which, for six years, had kept England and the continent in suspense. Taking the Bishops of Lincoln and Winchester and some lawyers with him, he proceeded quietly and without ostentation to the priory of Dunstable, five miles from Ampthill, where Queen Catherine was staying. He wished to avoid the notoricty of a trial held in London.

The ecclesiastical court being duly formed, Henry and Catherine were summoned to appear before it on the 10th of May. The king was present by attorney; but the queen replied: 'My eause is before the pope; I accept no other judge.' A fresh summons was immediately made out for the 12th of May, and, as the queen appeared neither in person nor by any of her servants, she was pronounced contumacious,* and the trial went forward. The king was informed every night of each day's proceedings, and he was often in great anxiety. Some unexpected event, an appeal from Catherine, the sudden intervention of the pope or of the emperor might stop everything. His courtiers were on the watch for news. Anne said nothing, but her heart beat quick; and the ambitious Cromwell, whose fortunes depended on the success of the matter, was sometimes in great alarm. Cranmer rested on the declarations of Scripture, and showed much equity and uprightness during the trial.† 'I have willingly injured no human being,' he said. But he knew the queen had numerous partisans; they would conjure her, perhaps, to appear before her judges. would then be a great stir, and the voice of the people would be heard. The archbishop could hardly restrain his emotion as he thought of this. He must indeed expect an inflexible resistance on the part of the queen; but, in the midst of all the agitation around her, she alone remainedcalm and resolute. Her hand had grasped the pope's robe, ^{* &#}x27;Vere et manifeste contumacem.' - State Papers (Henry VIII.) i. p. 394.

^{† &#}x27;My lord of Canterbury handleth himself very uprightly.' - Ibid. p. 395.

^{‡ &#}x27;A great bruit and voice of the people.' - Cranmer, Remains, p. 342.

d nothing could make her let it go. 'I am the king's viul wife,' she repeated, 'I am Queen of England My ughter is the king's child I place her in her fathers and.'

On Wednesday the 23d of May, the primate, attended , all the archiepiscopal court, proceeded to the church of t Peter's priory at Dunstable, in order to deliver the final adgment of divorce A few persons attracted by currosity ere present, but, although Dunstable was near Ampthill, il of Catherine's household kept themselves respectfully loof from an act which was to deal their mistress such grievous blow. The primate, after reciting the decisions of the several universities, provincial councils, and other premises, continued 'Therefore we, Thomas, archbishop, primate, and legate, having first called upon the name of Christ, and having God altogether before our eyes, do pronounce and declare that the marriage between our sovereign lord King Henry and the most sereno Lady Cutherine, widow of his brother, having been contracted contrary to the law of God, is null and yord, and therefore we sentence that it is not lawful for the said most illustrious Prince Henry and the said most screne Lady Catherine to remain in the said pretended marriage '. The net, drawn up very carefully by two notaries, was immediately sent to the Ling

The divorce was pronounced, and Henry was free. Many persons give way to feelings of alarm. They thought that all Furope would combine against England. The pope will excommunicate the English, said some, and then the emperor will destroy them. But, on the other hand, the majority of the nation desired to have done with a sulpic which had been againsting their minds during the last seven years. I right and getting out of a laby right from which sle had never expected to find an issue, began to breathe again

Catherine's marriage was declared to be null it only remained now to recognize Anne Boleyn's. On the 28th of May, an archiepiscopal court held at Lambeth, in the primate's palace, officially declared that Henry and Anne had been lawfully wedded, and the king had now no thought but how to seal his union by the pomp of a coronation. It would certainly have been preferable had the new queen taken her seat quietly on the throne; but slanderous reports made it necessary for the king to present his wife to the people in all the splendor of royalty.

Non licere in codem prætensa matrimonio remanere — Wilkies, Ometha ili p. 759; Rymer Fædera, vi p. 182

At three o'clock in the afternoon of Thursday before Whitsuntide, a magnificent procession started from Green-Fifty barges, adorned with rich banners, conveyed the representatives of the different city companies, and the metropolis joyfully hailed a union that promised to inaugurate a future of light and faith: it was almost a religious festival. On the banner of the Fishmongers was the inscription, All worship belongs to God alone; on that of the Haberdashers, My trust is in God only; on that of the Grocers, God gives grace; and on that of the Goldsmiths, To God alone be all the glory. The city of London thus asserted, in the presence of the immense erowd, the principles of the Reformation. The lord mayor's barge immediately preceded the galley, all hung with cloth of gold, in which Anne was seated. Near it floated another gay barge, on which a little mountain was contrived, planted with red and white roses, in the midst of which sat a number of young maidens singing to the accompaniment of sweet music. A hundred richly ornamented barques, carrying the nobility of England, brought up the magnificent procession, and a countless number of boats and skiffs covered the river. The moment Anne set her foot on shore at the Tower, a thousand trumpets sounded points of triumph, and all the guns of the fortress fired such a peal as had seldom been heard before.*

Henry, who liked the sound of cannon, met Anne at the gate and kissed her, and the new queen entered in triumph that vast fortress from which, three years later, she was to issue, by order of the same prince, to mount, an innocent victim, the cruel senfold. She smiled courtously on all around, and yet, seized with a sudden emotion, she sometimes trembled, as if, instead of the joyous flowers on which she trod with light and graceful foot, she saw a deep gulf yawning beneath her

^{*} Cranmer, Remains, p. 245.

The king and queen passed the whole of the next day (Friday) at the Tower. On Saturday Anne left it for Westimister. The streets were gay with banners, and the houses were hung with velvet and cloth of gold. All the orders of the State and Church, the ambassadors of France and Vence and the officers of the court, opened the procession. The queen was carried in a magnificent litter covered with white cloth shot with gold, her head, which she held modestly inclined, being energied with a wreath of precious stones. The people who crowded the streets were full of enthusiasm, and seemed to triumpli more than she did herself.

The next day, Whit-Sunday, she proceeded for the coronation to the necent ribbey of Westminster, where the isshops and the court had been summoned to meet her. She took her sent in a rich chair, whence she presently descended to the high ritar and knelt down. After the presented privers she rose, and the archbishop pheed the crown of St. Fdward upon her head. She then took the sacrament and retired, the Earl of Wiltshire, her father, treinbling with emotion, took her right hand. he was at the pinnacle of happiness, and yet he was unersy. Alast a caprice of the man who had raised his daughter to ^{*} Mr Frou Ie away that Anne went to the Tower on the 19th of Mas and that she quitted it for Westminster on the 11th so that she resided there for eleven days (History of Fagland, I pp 450 431). That appears hardly probable and is in contradiction to Crammer's narrative, where we resultive grave came to the Tower on Thursday at night. India will day the king and queen tarned there. The next day, w) ch was Saizeday, the knights and before the queen a grace towards Westmiler or Letters p. 213.

the throne might be sufficient to hurl her from it! Anne herself, in the midst of all these pomps, greater than any ever seen before at the coronation of an English queen, could not entirely forget the princess whose place she had now taken. Might not she be rejected in her turn? . . In such a thought there was enough to make her shudder.

Anne did not find in her marriage with Henry the Imppiness she had dreamt, and a cloud was often seen passing across those features once so radiant. The idol to which this young woman had sacrificed everything - the splendor of a throne - did not satisfy her longings for happiness: she looked within herself, and found once more, as quren, that attraction towards the doctrine of the Gospel which she had felt in the society of Margaret of Valois, and which, amid her ambitions pursuits, had been almost extinguished in her heart. She discovered that for those who have everything, as well as for those who have nothing, there is only one single good - God himself. She did not probably give herself up entirely to Him, for her best impressions were often fugitive; but she took advantage of her power to assist those who she knew were devoted to the Gospel. She petitioned for the pardon of John Lambert, who was still in prison, and that faithful confessor of Jesus Christ settled in London, where he began to teach children Latin and Greek, without however neglecting the defence of truth.*

Two women had for some time attracted the eyes of all England — the one who was ascending the throne, and the other who was descending from it. Nothing awakens the sympathy of generous souls more than misfortune, and particularly innocence in misfortune; and accordingly Catherine's fate will always excite a lively interest, even in the ranks of protestantism. We must not forget, however, that Catherine's cause was that of the old times and of the Roman papacy, and that Anne's cause was identified with that light, liberty, and new life which have distinguished modern times. It is true, Catherine died in disgrace, but in peace, surrounded by her women, her officer, her futhful servants; while the youthful Anne, separated from her friends, alone on a scaffold praying God to bless the prince who put her to death, had her head eruelly cut off by the hangman's sword. If on the one side there was innocence and divorce, on the other there was innocence and martyrdom.

^{* &#}x27;Lambert delivered . . by the coming of Queen Anne.' - Foxe, Acts, v. p. 225.

The Ling, who had informed Catherine through Lord Mountjoy of the archiepiscopal sentence, officially communicated his divorce and marriage to the various crowned heads of Europe, and particularly to the King of Prance, the emperor, and the pope The latter on the 11th of July an nulled the sentence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, declared the king's marriage with Anne Boleyn unlawful, and threatened to excommunicate both, unless they separated before the end of September Henry angrily commanded his theologians to demonstrate that the bull was a nullity, recalled his ambassador, the Duke of Norfolk, and said that the moment was come for all monarchs and all Christian people to withdraw from under the 30ke of the Bishop of Rome 'The pope and his cardinals,' he wrote to Francis I, pretend to have princes, who are free persons, at their beck and commandment. Sire, you and I and all the princes of Christeadom must unite for the preservation of our rights, liberties, and privileges, we must alienate the greate t part of Christendom from the see of Home'.

But Henry had scholashe prejudices, which made him fall into the strangest contradictions. While he was employing his diplomacy to i obte the pope, he still prayed him to defert the nullity of his marriage with Catherine? It is not at the court of this prince that we must look for the real Reformation, we must go in search of it elsewhere.

^{*} To the clear allenation of a great part of Christen lom from that see '- State Papers vii n 471

f 'That the matrimony was and is naught' - Ibld p 424

CHAPTER XVIII.

A REFORMER IN PRISON.

(August 1532 to May 1533.)

ONE of the leading scholars of England was about to seal the testimony of his faith with blood. John Fryth had been one of the most brilliant stars of the university of Cambridge. 'It would hardly be possible to find his equal in learning,' said many. Accordingly Wolsey had invited him to his college at Oxford, and Henry VIII. had desired to place him among the number of his theologians. But the mysteries of the Word of God had more attraction for Fryth than those of science: the wants of conscience prevailed in him over those of the intellect, and neglecting his own glory, he sought only to be useful to mankind.* A sincere, decided, and yet moderate Christian, preaching the Gospel with great purity and love, this man of thirty seemed destined to become one of the most influential reformers of England. Nothing could have prevented his playing the foremost part, if he had had Luther's enthusiastic energy or Calvin's indomitable power. There were less strong, but perhaps more amiable features in his character; he taught with gentleness those who were opposed to the truth, and while many, as Foxe says,† 'take the bellows in hand to blow the fire, but few there are that will seek to quench it,' Fryth sought after peace. Controversies between protestants distressed him. 'The opinions for which men go to war,' he said, 'do not deserve those great tragedies of which they make us spectators. Let there be no longer any question

^{* &#}x27;Serving for the common utility.' - Tyndale to Fryth, Works, iii. p. 74.

[†] Foxe, Acts, v. p. 10.

nmong us of Twinglians or Lutherans, for neither Lungle nor Luther died for us, and we must be one in Chrit Jesus' This servant of Christ, meek and lowly of heart, like his Master, never disputed even with papiets, nules obliged to do so ?

A true catholicism which embraced all Christians was Fryth's distinctive feature as a reformer He was not one of those who imagine that a national Church ought to think only of its own nation, but of those who believe that if a Church is the depositary of the truth, she is so for all the earth, and that a religion is not good, if it has no longing to extend itself to all the races of mankind. There were some strongly marked national elements in the Fuglish Reformation the king and the parliament, but there was nlso a universal element a lively faith in the Swiour of the world. No one in the sixteenth century repre ented this truly catholic element better than I're the I understand the Church of God in a wide sense, he said 'It contains all those whom we regard as members of Chrit It is n net thrown into the sea.' I This principle, sown at that time as a seed in the English Reformation, was one day to core? the world with missionaries

Fryth, having declined the brilliant offers the king latmade to him through Cromwell and Vanghan, joined Tyndale in transluting and publishing the Holy Scriptures in Prighsh While laboring thus for England, an irre-stable desire came over him to circulate the Gospel there in person. He therefore quitted the Low Countries, returned to Low don, and directed his course to Reading, where the proline been his friend. Fixle had not used him well in the entered that town miserably elothed, and more like a began than one whom Henry VIII had desired to place near lim-This was in August 1532.

[&]quot;Tyndale and Fryth Works 11 p 421

f 'He would never seem to strive against the papiets." - Foxe Acts ?

¹ Fryth, A Declaration of Baytum, p. 297

His writings had preceded him. Having received, when in the Netherlands, three works composed in defence of purgatory by three distinguished men — Rustell, Sir Thomas More's brother-in-law, More himself, and Fisher, Bishop of Rochester — Fryth had replied to them: 'A purgatory! there is not one only, there are two. The first is the Word of God, the second is the Cross of Christ: I do not mean the cross of wood, but the cross of tribulation. But the lives of the papists are so wicked that they have invented a third.'*

Sir Thomas, exasperated by Fryth's reply, said with that humorous tone he often affected, 'I propose to answer the good young father Fryth, whose wisdom is such that three old men like my brother Rastell, the Bishop of Rochester, and myself are mere babies when confronted with Father Fryth alone,'† The exile having returned to England, More had now the opportunity of avenging himself more effectually than by his jokes.

Fryth, as we have said, had entered Reading. strange air and his look as of a foreigner arriving from a distant country attracted attention, and he was taken up for a vagabond. 'Who are you?' asked the magistrate. Fryth, suspecting that he was in the hands of enemies of the Gospel, refused to give his name, which increased the suspicion, and the poor young man was set in the stocks. As they gave him but little to eat, with the intent of forcing him to tell his name, his hunger soon became insupportable.1 Knowing the name of the master of the grammar-school, he asked to speak with him. Leonard Coxe had searcely entered the prison, when the pretended vagabond all in rags addressed him in correct latinity, and began to deplore his miserable captivity. Never had words more noble been uttered in a dungeon so vile. The head-master, astonished at so much eloquence, compassionately drew near the nuhappy man and inquired how it came to pass that such a learned scholar was in such profound wretchedness.

^{*} See Tyndale and Fryth, Works, iii. p. 91. Preface to the Reader.

ently he sat down, and the two men begon to talk in Greek about the universities and languages. Coxe could not make it out it was no longer simple pity that he felt, but love, which turned to admiration when he heard the prisoner recite with the purest accent those noble lines of the Blad which were so annileable to his own case:

> Sing, O Muce, The rengeance deep and deadly, whence to Greece Unnumbered ills arose, which many a soul

Of mighty warriors to the viewless shades
Untimely sent.*

Filled with respect. Coxe hurried off to the mayor, com-

Filled with respect, Coxe nurried oil to the mayor, complained bitterly of the wrong done to so remarkable a man, and obtained his liberation. Homer saved the life of a reformer

Fryth departed for London and hastened to join the worshippers who were accustomed to meet in Bow Land. He conversed with them and exclaimed 'Oh' what consolation to see such a great number of behavers walking in the way of the Lord'! These Christians asked him to expound the Scriptures to them, and, dalighted with his exhortations, they exclaimed in their turn 'If the rule of St. Paul were followed, this man would certainly make a better bishop than many of those who were the mitre'! Instead of the croster he was to hear the cross.

Larl of Derby & Translation

[†] He added Now have f experience of the faith which is in you "Tyndsie and Fryth, Horks, iii p. 237 thit A.s.

I cannot remember it. 'Pray commit it to writing.' Fryth, who did not like discussions, was alarmed at the request, and answered; 'I do not care to touch that terrible tragedy;'* for so he called the dispute about the Eucharist. The man having repeated his request, and promised that he would not communicate the paper to anybody, Fryth wrote an explanation of the doctrine of the Sacrament and gave it to that London Christian, saying: 'We must eat and drink the body and blood of Christ, not with the teeth, but with the hearing and through faith.' The brother took the treatise, and, hurrying home with it, read it carefully.

In a short time every one at the Bow Lane meeting spoke about this writing. One man, a false brother, named William Holt, listened attentively to what was said, and thought he had found an opportunity of destroying Fryth. Assuming a hypocritical look, he spoke in a pious strain to the individual who had the manuscript, as if he had desired to enlighten his faith, and finally asked him for it. Having obtained it, he hastened to make a copy, which he carried to Sir Thomas More, who was still chancellor.

Fryth soon perceived that he had tried in vain to remain unknown; he called with so much power those who thirsted for righteousness to come to Christ for the waters of life, that friends and enemics were struck with his eloquence. Observing that his name began to be talked of in various places, he quitted the capital and travelled unnoticed through several counties, where he found some little Christian congregations whom he tried to strengthen in the faith.

Tyndalc, who remained on the continent, having heard of Fryth's labors, began to feel great anxiety about him. He knew but too well the cruel disposition of the bishops and of More. 'I will make the serpent come out of his dark den,' Sir Thomas had said, speaking of Tyndale, 'as Hercules forced Cerberus, the watch-dog of hell, to come out to the light of day. I will not leave Tyndale the darkest corner in which to hide his head '* In Tyndule's eyes Fryth was the great hope of the Church in England, he trembled lest the redoultable Hercules should seize him 'Dearly heloved brother Jacoh,' he wrote,—culling him Jacob to mi-lead his enemies,—'be cold, sober, wise, and circum spect, and keep you low by the ground, avoiding high questions that pass the common capacity. But expound the law truly, and open the veil of Moses to condemn all fiesh and prove all men sinners. Then set abroach the mercy of our Lord Jesus, and let the wounded consecures drink of him.

^{*} Tyndale and Fryth, Works, iii. p. 321.

All doctrine that easteth a mist on these two to Lord Jesus, and let the wounded consciences drink of him.

All doctrine that easieth a mist on these two to shadow and hide them, resist with all your power.

Beloved in my heart, there high not one in whom I have so great hope and trust, and in whom my heart rejoicely, not so much for your learning and what other gifts elee you may have, as because you walk in the e things that the conscience may feel, and not in the imagination of the brain Cleave first to the rock of the help of God, and in aught be required of you contrary to the glory of God and his Christ, then stand fast and commit yourself to God. He is our God, and our redemption is night?

Tyndale's fears were but too will founded Sir Thomas More held Fryth's new treat e in his hand he read it and, give way by turns to anger and saveram. Whetting his wits, calling his spirits together, and sharpening his pen,' to use the words of the chronicler, i he answered Fryth, and described his doctrine under the image of a cancer. This del not satisfy him. Although he had returned the scale to the long in May, he continued to hold office until the end of the year. He ordered search to be made for Fryth, and set all his bloodhounds on the track. If the reformer was discovered he was lost, when Sir Thomas More had once caught his man, nothing coult save him—nothing but a merry jest, perhaps. For instance, one day when le nat examining a gospeller named Silver: 'You know,' he said, with a smile, 'that silver must be tried in the fire.' 'Yes,' retorted the accused instantly, 'but not quicksilver.'* More delighted with the repartee, set the poor wretch at liberty. But Fryth was no jester: he could not hope, therefore, to find favor with the ex-chancellor of England.

[•] Confute on of Typicale's Assert, by Sir Thomas More lord chancel for of hingian i (1832).

those, Acts v p 133

^{1 1991} L .

Sir Thomas hunted the reformer by sea and by land, promising a great reward to any one who should deliver him up. There was no county or town or village where More did not look for him, no sheriff or justice of the peace to whom he did not apply, no harbor where he did not post some officer to catch him.† But the answer from every quarter was: 'He is not here.' Indeed, Fryth, having been informed of the great exertions of his enemy, was fleeing from place to place, often changing his dress, and finding safety nowhere. Determining to leave England and return to Tyndale, he went to Milton Shone in Essex with the intention of embarking. A ship was ready to sail, and quitting his hiding-place he went down to the shore with all precaution. He had been betrayed. More's agents, who were on the watch, seized him as he was stepping on board, and carried him to the Tower. This occurred in October 1532.

Sir Thomas More was uneasy and soured. He beheld a new power lifting its head in England and all Christendom, and he felt that in despite of his wit and his influence he was unable to eheek it. That man so amiable, that writer of a style so pure and elegant, did not so much dread the anger of the king; what exasperated him was to see the Scriptures eireulating more widely every day, and a continually increasing number of his fellow-citizens converted to the evangelical faith. These new men, who seemed to have more piety than himself—he an old follower of the old papacy!—irritated him sorely. He elaimed to have alone—he and his friends—the privilege of being Christians The zeal of the par's ans of the Reformation, the sacrifice they made of their repose, their money, and thar lives, confounded him "These dividual people," he sai, 'print their books at great expense, notwithstanding the great danger, not looking for any grun, they give them away to everybody, and even scatter them abroad by night. They feer no labor, no journey, no expense, no prin, no danger, no blows, no injury They take a maheious pleas income in secking the destruction of others, and these di ciples of the devit think only how they may east the souls of the simple into hell fire. In such a strum as this did the elegant utopist give vent to Lis anger—the man who had dreamt all his life of the plan of an imagin ray world for the perfect happiness of every one. At last he I ad caught the chief of these disciples of Sitaa and hoped to put him to death by fire

The news soon spread through London that Fryth was in the tower, and several priests and bishops immediately went thither to try to bring him back to the pope. Their great argument was that More had confuted his treati e on the Lord's Supper Frith asked to see the confutation, but it was refused him One day the Bishop of Winchester haring called up the pri oner, showed it to Fryth, and, holding it up, asserted that the book quite shut his mouth. I ryth put out las hand, but the bishop hastily withdrew the vel ume More lumself was ashamed of the apology and del all he could to prevent its circulation. Tryth could only obt un a written copy, but he resolved to answer it immedi ately There was no one with whom he could confer, not a book he could consolt, and the chains with which he was lorded scarcely allowed him to sit and write ! But reading in his dangeon by the light of a small candle the insults of More, and finding lumself charged with having collected all the porson that could be found in the writings of Wickliffe,

^{*} Preface to More a Confuta ion, Bille Ann. 1 p 313

f'lle was so loaded with from that he could scarce at with any ease. - Burnet, L. p. 161

Luther, Œeolampadius, Tyndale, and Zwingle, this humble servant of God exclaimed: 'No! Luther and his doctrine are not the mark I aim at, but the Scriptures of God.'* 'He shall pay for his heresy with the best blood in his body,' said his enemies; and the pious disciple replied: 'As the sheep bound by the hand of the butcher with timid look beseeches that his blood may soon be shed, even so do I pray my judges that my blood may be shed to-morrow, if by my death the king's eyes should be opened.' †

Before he died, Fryth desired to save, if it were God's will, one of his adversaries. There was one of them who had no obstinaey, no malice: it was Rastell, More's brother-Being unable to speak to him or to any of the enemies of the Reformation, he formed the design of writing in prison a treatise which should be ealled the Bulwark. But strict orders had recently arrived that he should have neither pen, ink, nor paper.‡ Some evangelical Christians of London, who succeeded in getting access to him, secretly furnished him with the means of writing, and Fryth began. He wrote . . . but at every moment he listened for fear the lieutenant of the Tower or the warders should come upon him suddenly and find the pen in his hand.§ Often a bright thought would occur to him, but some sudden alarm drove it out of his mind, and he could not recall it. took courage, however: he had been accused of asserting that good works were of no service: he proceeded to explain with much eloquence all their utility, and every time he repeated: 'Is that nothing? is that still nothing? Truly, Rastell,' he added, 'if you only regard that as useful which justifies us, the sun is not useful, because it justifieth not.' ¶

As he was finishing these words he heard the keys rat-

^{*} Tyndale and Fryth, Works, iii. p. 342.

[†] Ibid. p. 338.

[†] The Subsidy or Bulwark: Tyndale and Fryth, Works, iii. p. 242.

^{§ &#}x27;I am in continual fear, lest the lieutenant or my keeper should espy any such thing by me.'— Ibid.

[&]quot;If any notable thing had been in my mind, it was clean lost.'-Ibid.

The Subsidy or Bulwark; Tyndale and Fryth, Works, iii. p. 241.

thing at the door, and, being alarmed, immediately three paper, inh, and pen into a hiding place. However, he was able to complete the irretu e and send it to Rastell. More's brother in law rend it, his heart was touched, his under standing enlightened, his prejudices clarred may, and from that hour this choice spirit was gained over to the Go-pel of Christ. God hid given him new eyes and new ear. A pure joy filled the prisoner's heart. 'Rastell now looks upon his natural reason as fooli himses,' he said. 'Rastell, become a child, drinks the wildow that cometh from on light'."

The conversion of Sir Thomas Mores brother in law made a great sensation, and the visits to Fryth's cell became every day more numerous. Although separated from his wife and from Tyndale, whom he had been forced to leave in the Low Countries, he had never had so many friend, brothers, mother, and fathers, he went for very joy file took his pen and paper from their hiding place, and, always indefatigible, begin to write first the Looking-glass of Self knowledge and next a Letter to the faithful Followers of the Gospel of Christ 'Imitators of the Lord' he said to them mark yourselves with the sign of the cross, not as the sit perstitious croud does, in order to worship it, but us a te ti mony that you are ready to bear that cross as soon as God shall please to send it. Fear not when you have it, for you will also have a hundred futhers instead of one, a hundred mothers instead of one, a hundred mansions already in this life (for I have made the trial), and after this life, joy everlasting 't

At the beginning of 1533, Anne Boleyn having been matried to the King of Fugland, Fryth saw has claims fall off he was allowed to have all he asked for, and even permitted to leave the Tower at might on parole. He took advantage of this liberty to visit the friends of the Gospel, and consult with them about which was to be done

^{*} The Substity or Bulwark Tynfale and Fryth, Worls hi p. 211 1 1614 p. 2 2

balance, it has cancified the Reformation of England, and been a spiritual seed for future ages. If the Church of that rich country, which posses es such worldly splender, his nevertheless witnessed the development of a powerful evangelical life in its bo-om, it must not forget the cause, but inderstand, with Tertulhan, that the blood of the markyrs is the seed of the Church

CHAPTER XIX

A REFORMER CHOOSES RATHER TO LOSF HIS LIFE THAY
TO SAVE IT.

(MAT TO JULY 1533)

Tur enemy was on the watch the second period of Pryth's captivity, that which was to terminate in martyrdom, was beginning Henry's bishops, who, while easing off the pope to please the Ling, had remained devoted to scholastic doctrines, feared lest the reformer should escape them they therefore undertook to solicit Henry to put him to death Fryth had on his side the queen, Cromwell, and Cranner This did not discourage them, and this represented to the king that although the man was shut up in the Tower of London, he did not cease to write and not in defence of heresy It was the serson of Lant, and I'rythis enem es come to an understanding with Dr Curwin, the king's chaplun, who was to preach before the court He had no so ner got into the pull it than he began to declaim against the e who denied the material presence of Christ in the lost Having struck his hearers with horror, he continued 'It is not surprising that this abominable heresy makes such great progress among us A man now in the Tower of Lonlon has the audaeity to defend it, and no one thinks of punishing him.'

When the service was over, the brilliant eongregation left the chapel, and each as he went out asked what was the man's name. 'Fryth' was the reply, and loud were the exclamations on hearing it. The blow took effect, the scholastic prejudices of the king were revived, and he sent for Cromwell and Cranmer. 'I am very much surprised,' he said, 'that John Fryth has been kept so long in the Tower without examination. I desire his trial to take place without delay; and if he does not retract, let him suffer the penalty he deserves.' He then nominated six of the chief spiritual and temporal peers of England to examine him: they were the Arehbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of London and Winchester, the lord chancellor, the Duke of Suffolk, and the Earl of Wiltshire. This demonstrated the importance which Henry attached to the affair. Until now, all the martyrs had fallen beneath the blows either of the bishops or of More; but in this ease it was the king himself who stretched out his strong hand against the servant of God.

Henry's order plunged Cranmer into the eruellest anxiety. On the one hand, Fryth was in his eyes a disciple of the Gospel; but on the other, he attacked a doctrine which the archbishop then held to be Christian; for, like Luther and Osiander, he still believed in consubstantiation. 'Alas!' he wrote to Archdeacon Hawkins, 'he professes the doctrine of Œcolampadius.'* He resolved, however, to do everything in his power to save Fryth.

The best friends of the young reformer saw that a pile was being raised to eonsume the most faithful Christian in England. 'Dearly beloved,' wrote Tyndale from Antwerp, 'fear not men that threat, nor trust men that speak fair. Your eause is Christ's Gospel, a light that must be fed with the blood of faith. The lamp must be trimmed daily, that the light go not out. There was no lack of examples to confirm these words. Two have suffered in Antwerp unto the great glory of the Gospel, foar at Ryselles in Flanders At Rouen in France they persecute, and at Paris are fire doctors taken for the Gospel See, you are not alone follow the example of all your other dear brethren, who choose to suffer in hope of a better resurrection. Bear the image of Christ in your mortal body, and keep your con science pure and undefiled. Una salux victis, nul law sperare salutem the only safety of the conquered is to look for none. If you could but write and till us how you are. In this letter from a martyr to a marityr there was one sentence honorable to a Christian woman 'Your wife is rell content with the will of God, and would not for her sake have the glory of God handered'

^{*} Cranmer's Letters and Remains,

If friends were thinking of Fryth on the banks of the Scholdt, they were equally anxious about him on the banks of the Thames Worthy citizens of London asked what was the use of England's quitting the pope to ching to Christ, if she burnt the servagts of Chr. t? The httle Church had recourse to prayer Archhishop Cranmer wished to save Fryth he loved the man and admired his piety. If the accused appeared before the commission appointed by the king, he was lost some means must be devised without delay to rescue him from an inevitable death. The arch hishop declared that, before proceeding to trial he wished to have a conference with the prisoner, and to endeavor to convince him, which was very natural But at the same time the primate appeared to fear that if the conference took place in London the people would disturb the public peace, as in the time of Wickliffe † He settled therefore that it should be held at Croydon, where he had a palace The primate's fear seems rather strange A riot on ac

^{*}Tyndale to Fryth Foxe, v p 132, Anderson, Annals of Bible, i. P
357
† 'For there should be no concourse of citizens — Foxe Acts vin P

⁶³⁶

eount of Fryth, at a time when king, commons, and people were in harmony, appeared hardly probable. Cranmer had another motive.

Among the persons composing his household was a gentleman of benevolent character, and with a leaning towards the Gospel, who was distressed at the cruelty of the bishops, and looked upon it as a lawful and Christian act to rob them, if possible, of their vietims. Giving him one of the porters of Lambeth palace as a companion, Cranmer committed Fryth to his care to bring him to Croydon. They were to take the prisoner a journey of four or five hours on foot through fields and woods, without any constables or soldiers. A strange walk and a strange escort.

Lord Fitzwilliam, first Earl of Southampton and governor of the Tower, at that time lay siek in his house at Westminster, suffering such severe pain as to force loud groans from him. On the 10th of June, at the desire of my Lord of Canterbury, the arehbishop's gentleman, and the Lambeth porter, Gallois, surnamed Perlebeane, were introduced into the nobleman's bedchamber, where they found him lying upon his bed in extreme agony. Fitzwilliam, a man of the world, was greatly enraged against the evangelicals, who were the cause, in his opinion, of all the difficulties of England. The gentleman respectfully presented to him the primate's letter and the king's ring. 'What do you want?' he asked sharply, without opening the letter. 'His grace desires your lordship to deliver Master Fryth to us.' The impatient Southampton flew into a passion at the name, and eursed Fryth and all the heretics.† He thought it strange that a gentleman and a porter should have to convey a prisoner of such importance to the episcopal court: were there no soldiers in the Tower? Had Fitzwilliam any suspicion or did he regret to see the reformer leave the walls within which he had been kept so safely? We cannot tell but he must obey, for they brought him the kings signet Accordingly, taking his own hastily from his finger 'Tryth,' he said, 'Fryth . . Here, show this to the lieutenant of the Tower, and take away your heretic quickly I am but too happy to get rid of him'

^{*} The narrative from which we learn these particulars is given in the eighth volume of Foxe's Acts, and seems to have been written by the gentleman himself. The circumstance that it is drawn up so as to corneither himself nor Cranmer is of itself a confirmation.

[†] Foxe, Acts, viii. p. 696.

A few hours later Tryth, the gentleman, and Perlebeane entered a boat moored near the Tower, and were rowed speedily to the archbishop's palace at Lumbeth. At first the three persons preserved a strict silence, only interrupted from time to time by the deep sighs of the gentleman Being charged to begin by trying to induce Tryth to make some compromise, he broke the silence at last 'Master Tryth,' he said 'if you are not prudent you are lost. What a pity' you that are so learned in Latin and Greek and in the Holy Scriptures the uncent doctors, and all kind of knowledge, you will perish, and all your idmirable gifts will perish with you with little profit to the world and less comfort to your wife and children, your kinefolk and frends'

The gentleman was silent a minute and then begin again. Your position is dangerous, Master Fright but not desperate you have many friends who will do all they can in your favor. On your part do something for them, make some concession, and you will be safe. Your opinion on it e merely spiritual presence of the body and blood of the Saviour is premature, it is too soon for us in England, wait until a better time comes?

Fryth did not say a word no sound was heard but the dash of the water and the noise of the oar the gentleman thought he had shiken the young doctor and after a moment's silence, he resumed 'My lord Cromwell and my lord of Canterbury feel great affection for you they know that, if you are young in years, you are old in knowledge and may become a most profitable extraction of this realim. If you will be somewhat advised by their counsel, they will never permit you to be harmed, but if you stand stiff to your opinion, it is not possible to save your life, for as you have good friends so have you mortal enemies.'

The gentleman stopped and looked at the prisoner. was by such language that Bilney had been seduced; but Fryth kept himself in the presence of God, ready to lose his life that he might save it. He thanked the gentleman for his kindness, and said that his conscience would not permit him to recede, out of respect to man, from the true doctrine of the Lord's Supper. 'If I am questioned on that point, I must answer according to my conscience, though I should lose twenty lives if I had so many. I can support it by a great number of passages from the Holy Scriptures and the ancient doctors, and, if I am fairly tried, I shall have nothing to fear.'- 'Marry!' quoth the gentleman, 'if you be fairly tried, you would be safe; but that is what I very much doubt. Our Master Christ was not fairly tried, nor would be be, as I think, if he were now present again in the world. How, then, should you be, when your opinions are so little understood and are so odious?'-'I know,' answered Fryth, 'that the doctrine which I hold is very hard ment to be digested just now; but listen to me.' As he spoke, he took the gentleman by the hand: 'If you live twenty years more, you will see the whole realm of my opinion concerning this sacrament of the altar - all, except a certain class of men. My death, you say, would be sorrowful to my friends, but it will be only for a short time. But, all things considered, my death will be better unto me and all mine than life in continual bondage. God knoweth what he hath to do with his poor servant, whose cause I now defend. He will help me, and no man shall prevail on me to step backwards.'

The boat reached Lambeth. The travellers landed, entered the archbishop's palace, and, after taking some refreshment, started on foot for Croydon, twelve miles from London.

The three travellers proceeded over the hills and through the plains of Surrey. Here and there flocks of sheep were grazing in the scanty pastures, and to the east stretched vast woods The gentleman walked mournfully by the side of Fryth It was useless to ask him again to retrict, but another idea engrossed Cranmer's officer, - that of letting Tryth escape The country was then thinly inhabited the woods which covered it on the east and the chalky hills might serve as a hiding place for the fugitive. The diffi culty was to persuade Perlebenne The gentleman slack ened his pace, called to the porter, and they walked by themselves behind the prisoner When they were so far off that he could not hear their conversation, the gentleman sud 'You have heard this man, I am sure, and noted his talk since he came from the Tower' - 'I never heard so constant a man,' Perlabeane answered, 'nor so eloquent a person' - 'You have heard nothing,' resumed the gentle man, 'm respect both of his knowledge and his eloquence If you could hear him at the university or in the pulpit, you would admire him still more England has never had such a one of his age with so much learning And yet our hishops treat him as if he were a very dolt or an idiot. They abhor him as the devil himself and want to get rid of him by any means' - 'Marry I' said the porter, 'if there were nothing else in him but the consideration of his person hoth comely and amable, his disposition so gentle, meek, and humble, it were pity he should be east away' - 'Cast away, interrupted the gentleman 'he will certainly he cast away if we once bring him to Croydon' And lowering his voice, he continued 'Surely, hefore God I speak it, if thou, Perlebeane, wert of my mind, we should never bring him thither' - 'What do you mean?' asked the astonile! porter Then, after a moment's silence, he added 'I know that you have a great deal more responsibility in this matter man, I will yield to your proposal with all my heart.' The gentleman breathed aguin Cranmer had desired that all possible efforts should be made to change Fryths sentiments, and these failing, he wished to save him in another way. It was his desire that the Reformer should go on foot to Croydon; that he should be accompanied by two only of his servants, selected from those best disposed towards the new doctrine. The primate's gentleman would never have dared to take upon himself, except by his master's desire, the responsibility of conniving at the escape of a prisoner who was to be tried by the first personages of the realm, appointed by the king himself. Happy at having gained the porter to his enterprise, he began to disease with him the ways and means. He knew the country well, and his plan was arranged.

than I have, and therefore, if you can honestly save this

'You see yonder hill before us,' he said to Perlebenne; it is Brixton Causeway, two miles from London. There are great woods on both sides. When we come to the top, we will permit Fryth to escape to the woods on the left hand, whence he may easily get into Kent, where he was born, and where he has many friends. We will linger an hour or two on the road after his flight, to give him time to reach a place of safety, and when night approaches, we will go to Streatham, which is a mile and a half off, and make an outery in the town that our prisoner has escaped into the woods on the right hand towards Wandsworth; that we followed him for more than a mile, and at length lost him because we were not many enough. At the same time we will take with us as many people as we can to search for him in that direction; if necessary we will be all night about it; and before we can send the news of what has happened to Croydon, Fryth will be in safety, and the bishops will be disappointed.'

The gentleman, we see, was not very scrupulous about the means of reseuing a vietim from the Roman priests. Perlebeane thought as he did. 'Your plan pleases me,' he answered; 'now go and tell the prisoner, for we are already at the foot of the hill.'

The delighted gentleman hurried forward. 'Master Fryth,' he said, 'let us talk together a little. I cannot hide from you that the task I have undertaken, to bring you to Croydon, as a sheep to the slaughter, grieves me exceedingly, and there is no droger I would not brave to deliver you out of the hon's mouth Inder good fellow and I have devised a plan whereby you may escape Listen to me The gentleman having described his plan, Fryth smiled amendly, and said 'fline, then, is the result of your long consultation together I on have wasted your time If you were both to leave me here and go to Cloydon, declaring to the bishops you had lost me, I should follow after as fast as I could, and bring them news that I had found and brought Fryth again.'

The centleman had not expected such an answer prisoner refuse his liberty! 'You are mid,' he aid 'do you think your reasoning will convert the bishops? At Milton Shone you tried to escape beyond the sea, and now you refuse to save yourself!'- 'The two cases are different, anonered Frith, 'then I was at liberty, and, accord ing to the advice of St Paul, I would fain have enjoyed my liberty for the continuance of my studies. But now the higher power, as it were by Almighty God's permission, has seized me, and my conscience binds me to defend the doctriae for which I am persecuted, if I would not incur our Lord's condemnation If I should now run away, I should run from my God, if I should fly, I should fly from the testimony I am bound to bear to his Holy Word, and I should deserve a thousand bells I most heartly thank you both for your good will towards me, but I beseech you to bring me where I nas appointed to be brought, for el e I will go thither all alone "

Those who desired to save Fryth had not counted upon so much integrity Such were, however, the martyrs of protestantiem. The archivehop's two servants continued their route along with their stringe prisoner. I right had a calm eye and cheerful look, and there to of the journey wis accomplished in pioos and agreeable conversation. When they reached Croydon, he was delivered to the officers of the cpiscopal court, and passed the night in the lodge of the primate's porter.

The next morning he appeared before the bishops and peers appointed to examine him. Cranmer and Lord Chancellor Andley desired his acquittal; but some of the other judges were men without pity.

The examination began:

Do you believe,' they said, 'that the sacrament of the altar is or is not the real body of Christ?' Fryth answered, simply and firmly: 'I believe that the bread is the body of Christ in that it is broken, and thus teaches us that the body of Christ was to be broken and delivered unto death to redeem us from our iniquities. I believe the bread is the body of Christ in that it is distributed, and thus teaches us that the body of Christ and the fruits of his passion are distributed unto all faithful people. I believe that the bread is the body of Christ so far as it is received, and thus it teaches us that even as the ontward man receiveth the sacrament with his teeth and mouth, so doth the inward man truly receive through faith the body of Christ and the fruits of his passion.'

The judges were not satisfied: they wanted a formal and complete retractation. 'Do you not think,' asked one of them, 'that the natural body of Christ, his flesh, blood, and bones, are contained under the sacrament and are there present without any figure of speech?'—'No,' he answered; 'I do not think so;' adding with much humility and charity: 'notwithstanding I would not have that any should count my saying to be an article of faith. For even as I say, that you ought not to make any necessary article of the faith of your part; so I say again, that we make no necessary article of the faith of our part, but leave it indifferent for all men to judge therein, as God shall open their hearts, and no side to condemn or despise the other, but to nourish in all things brotherly love, and to bear one another's infirmities.'*

The commissioners then undertook to consince Tryth of the truth of transubstratintion, but he quoted Scripture, St Augustine and Chrysestom, and elequently defended the doctrine of the spiritual enting. The court role Craimer had been moved, although he was still under the influence of Luther's tending. 'The man spoke admirably' he said to Dr. Henth as they went out, 'and yet in my opinion he is wrong.' Not many years later he devoted one of the most important of his writings to an explanation of the doctrine now professed by the young reformer, it may be that Fryth's words had begun to shake him.

Full of love for him, Crimmer desired to save him Four times during the course of the examination he sent for Fryth and conversed with him privately,† always as-his doctrino in a public discussion against any one who was willing to attack it, but nobody accepted his challenge ! Cranmer, distressed at seeing all his efforts useless, found there was nothing more for him to do, the cause was transferred to the ordinary, the Bi hop of London, and on the 17th of June the prisoner was once more committed to the Tower The hishon selected as his asses ors for the trial, Longland, Bishop of Lincoln, and Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester there were no severer judges to be found on tha episcopal bench At Cambridge, Fryth had been the most distinguished pupil of the clever and ambitious Gardiner, but this, instead of exciting the compassion of that hard man, did but increase his anger 'Fryth and his friends,' he said, 'are villains, blaschemers, and limbs of the devil'$

On the 20th of June, Fryth was taken to St Paul's before the three bishops, and though of a bumble disposition and almost tunid character, he answered boldly A clerk

^{*} Mit den Zahnen zu bissen '- Plank un p 369

^{† &#}x27;And surely I myself sent for him three or four times to persuade him? - Cranmer Remains Letters p 245

t'There was no man willing to answer him in open disputation' --

B shop Hooper Early Westings p 245

took down all his replies, and Fryth, snatching up the pen, wrote: 'I. Fryth think thus. Thus have I spoken, written, defended, affirmed, and published in my writings.' The bishops having asked him if he would retract his errors, Fryth replied: 'Let justice have its course and the sentence be pronounced.' Stokesley did not keep him writing long. 'Not willing that thou, Fryth, who art wicked,' he said, 'shouldst become more wicked, and infect the Lord's flock with thy heresies, we declare thee excommunicate and cast out from the Church, and leave ther unto the scenlar powers, most carnestly requiring them in the truth of our Lord Jesus Christ that thy execution and punishment be not too extreme, nor yet the gentleness too much mitigated.' †

Fryth was taken to Newgate and shut up in a dark cell, where he was bound with chains on the hands and feet as heavy as he could bear, and round his neck was a collar of iron, which fastened him to a post, so that he could neither stand upright nor sit down. Truly the 'gentleness' was not 'too much mitigated.' His charity never failed him. 'I am going to die,' he said, 'but I condemn neither those who follow Luther nor those who follow Œcolampadius, since both reject transubstantiation.' A young mechanic of twenty-four, Andrew Hewet by name, was placed in his eell. Fryth asked him for what crime he was sent to prison. 'The bishops,' he replied, 'asked me what I thought of the sacrament, and I answered, "I think as Fryth does." Then one of them smiled, and the Bishop of London said: "Why Fryth is a heretic, and already condemned to be burnt, and if you do not retract your opinion you shall be burnt with him." "Very well," I answered, "I am content." § So they sent me here to be burnt along with you.'

^{* &#}x27;Ego Frythus ita sentio, ita dixi, scripsi, asirmavi, &c.' — Foxe, Acts. v. p. 14.

[†] Ibid. p. 15.

^{‡ &#}x27;All the Germans, both of Luther's side and also of Œcolampadius.' — Tyndale and Fryth, Works, iii. p. 455.

[§] Foxe, Acts, v. p. 18

On the 4th of July they were both taken to Smithfield the executioners fastened them to the post, back to back. the torch was applied, the flame rose in the air, and Fryth, stretching out his hands, embraced it as if it were a dear friend whom he would welcome The spectators were touched, and showed marks of heely sympathy 'Of a truth, said an evengelical Christian in after days, 'he was one of those prophets whom God, having pity on this realm of England, rused up to call us to repentance' His enemies were there Cooke, a fanatic pirest, observing some persons praying, called out 'Do not pray for such folks, any more than you would for a dog't At the moment a sweet light shone on Fryth's face, and he was heard beseeching the Lord to pardon his enemies Hewet died first, and Fryth thanked God that the sufferings of his young brother were over Committing his soul into the Lord's hands he expired 'Truly,' exclumed many, 'great are the victories Christ gains in his saints?

So many souls were enlightened by Fryth's writings that this reformer contributed powerfully to the renovation of England 'One day, an Englishman,' says Thomas Becom, prebendary of Canterbury and chapl un to Archbishop Cran mer, having taken leave of his mother and friends, travelled into Derbyshire, and from thence to the Penk, a mar vellous barren country, and where there was then 'neither learning nor yet no spark of godbness.' Coming into a lit tle village named Alsop in the Dale, he chanced upon a certain gentleman also named Alsop lord of that village, a man not only ancient in years but also ripe in the knowl edge of Christ's doctrine After they had taken 'a suffi cient repast,' the gentleman showed his guest certain books which he called his jewels and principal treasures the e were the New Testament and some books of Fryth's In these godly treatises this ancient gentleman occupied him self among his rocks and mountains both diligently and virtuously. 'He did not only love the Gospel,' adds Cranmer's chaplain, he 'lived it also.'*

Fryth's writings were not destined to be read always with the same avidity: the truth they contain is, however, good for all times. The books of the apostles and of the reformers which that gentleman of Alsop read in the sixteenth century were better calculated to bring joy and peace to the soul than the light works read with such avidity in the world.

CHAPTER XX.

ENGLAND SEPARATES GRADUALLY FROM THE PAPACY.

(1533.)

When Fryth mounted the scaffold, Anne Boleyn had been seated a month on the throne of England. The salvoes of artillery which had saluted the new queen had reechoed all over Europe. There could be no more doubt: the Earl of Wiltshire's daughter, radiant with grace and beauty, wore the Tudor crown; every one, especially the imperial family, must bear the consequences of the act. One day Sir John Hacket, English envoy at Brussels, arrived at court just as Mary, regent of the Low Countries, was about to mount her horse. 'Have you any news from England?' she asked him in French.—'None,' he replied. Mary gave him a look of surprise,† and added: 'Then I have, and not over good methinks.' She then told him of the king's marriage, and Hacket rejoined with an unembarrassed air: 'Madam, I know not if it has taken place, but everybody who considers it coolly and without family prejudice will agree that it is a lawful and a conseintious marrage. Mary, who wos meec of the unhappy Catherine, replied 'Mr Ambas ador, God koows I wish all may go well, but I do not know how the emperor and the king my brother will take it, for it touches them as well as me?—'I think I may be certain,' returned Sir John, 'thot they will take it 10 good part'.—'Thot I do not koow, Mr Ambassador,' said the regent, who doubted it much, ond then mounting her horse, she rode out for the chase *

^{*} Becon, Jewel of Joy (Parker Soc.), p. 420.

^{† &#}x27;She gave me a look as to that she should marvell thereof.' — State Papers, vii. p. 451.

Charles V was exasperated he immediately pressed the pope to intervene, and on the 12th of May, Clement ested the king to appear at Rome The pontiff was greatly embarrassed having a particular liking for Benet, Heory's agent, he took him aside, and said to him privately † 11s an offair of such importance that there has been once like it for many jeors I fear to kindle o fire that neither pope nor emperor will be able to quench' And then he added unaffectelly 'Beades, I cannot pronounce the king's excommunication before the emperor has an army ready to constrain him' Henry heing told of this ande made most over 'Hoving the justice of our cause for us, with the entire ecosent of our nobility, commons, and subjects, we do not care for what the pope may do' Accordingly he appealed from the pope to a general council

The pope was now more emburrussed than ever, 'I can not stand still ond do nothing,' he said $\frac{1}{2}$ On the 12th of July he revoked all the English proceedings and excommunicated the king, but suspended the effects of his sentence until the end of September 'I hope,' said Henry con temptuously, 'that before then the pope will understand his folly' $\frac{1}{2}$

He reckoned on Francis I to help him to understand it,

^{*} Setting forward to ride out a hunting ! - State Papers, vir p. 451

[†] Taking me aside showed unto me secretly -Ibid p 457

t'So sore for him to stand still and do nothing - Ibid p 469 State Papers (Henry VIII) vu p 496

but that prince was about to receive the pope's niece into his family, and Henry made every exertion, but to no effect, to prevent the meeting of Clement and Francis at Marseilles. The King of England, who had already against him the Netherlands, the Empire, Rome, and Spain, saw France also slipping from him. He was isolated in Europe, and that became a serions matter. Agitated and indignant, he came to an extraordinary resolution, namely, to turn to the disciples and friends of that very Luther whom he had formerly so disdainfully treated.

Stephen Vanghan and Christopher Mann were despatched, the former to Saxony, the other to Bavaria.* Vaughan reached Weimar on the 1st of September, where he had to wait five days for the Elector of Saxony, who was away hunting. On the 5th of September he had an andience of the prince, and spoke to him first in French and then in Latin. Seeing that the elector, who spoke neither French, English, nor Latin, answered him only with nods,† he begged the chancellor to be his interpreter. A written answer was sent to Vanghan at seven in the evening: the Elector of Saxony turned his back on the powerful King of England. He was unworthy, he said, to have at his court ambassadors from his royal majesty; and besides, the emperor, who was his only master, might be displeased. Vaughan's annoyance was extreme. 'Strange rudeness!' he exclaimed. 'A more uncourteous refusal has never been made to such a gracious proposition. And to my greater misfortune, it is the first mission of kind with which I have ever been entrusted.' He left Weimar determined not to deliver his credentials either to the Landgrave of Hesse or to the Duke of Lanenberg, whom he was instructed to visit: he did not wish to run the chance of receiving fresh affronts.

A strange lot was that of the King of England! the pope excommunicating him, and the heretics desiring to have nothing to do with him! No more allies, no more friends. Be it so, if the nation and the monarch are agreed, what is there to fear? Besides at the very moment thus affiont was offered him, his joy was at its height, the hope of soon possessing that heir, for whom he had longed so many years, quite trunsported him. He ordered an official letter to be prepared announcing the birth of a prince to the great joy of the Ling, it ran, and of all his loving subjects. Only the date of the letter was left hlank.

^{*} State Papers, (Henry VIII.), vii. p. 501.

^{† &#}x27;Sed tantum annuit capite.' - Ibid. p. 502.

On the 7th of September, two days after the elector's refusal, Anne, then residing in the palace at Greenwich, was brought to bed of a fine well formed child, reminding the cossips of the features of both parents, but alas! it was a girl Henry, aguated by two strong affections, love for Anne and desire for a son, had been kept in great anxiety during the time of labor. When he was told that the child was a girl, the love he hore for the mother prevailed, and though disappointed in his fondest wishes, he received the habo with 10v. But the famous letter announcing the birth of a prince . . . what must be done with it now? Henry ordered the queen's secretary to add an s to the word prince, and despatched the circular without making any change in the expression of his satisfaction * The christening was celebrated with great pomp, two hundred torches were carried before the princess, a fit emblem of the light which her reign would shed abroad. The child was named Elizabeth, and Henry gave her the title of Princess of Wales, declaring her his successor, in case he should have no male offspring. In London the excitement was great, Te Deums, bells, and music filled the air The adepts of judicial astrology declared that the stars announced a glorious future. A bright star was indeed rising over England, and the English people, throwing off the yoke of Rome, were about to start on a carcer of freedom, morality, and greatness. The firm Elizabeth was not destined to shine by the amiability which distinguished her mother, and the restrictions she placed upon liberty tend rather to remind us of her father. Yet while on the continent kings were trampling under foot the independence of their subjects, the English people, under Anne Boleyn's daughter, were to develop themselves, to flourish in letters, and in arts, to extend navigation and commerce, to reform abuses, to exercise their liberties, to watch energetically over the public good, and to set up the torch of the Gospel of Christ.

^{*}This official document is given in the State Papers, i. p. 407 An examination of the manuscript in the Harleian collection, shows that the swas added afterwards in the two following passages "bringing forth of a

The king of France very adverse to England's becoming independent of Rome, at last prevailed upon Henry to send two English agents (Gardiner and Bryan) to Marseilles. 'You will keep your eyes open,' said Henry VIII. to them, 'and lend an attentive ear, but you will keep your mouths shut.' The English envoys being invited to a conference with Clement and Francis, and solicited by those great personages to speak, declared that they had no powers. then were you sent?' exclaimed the king unable to conceal The ambassadors only answered with a his vexation. smile.* Francis who meant to uphold the authority of the pope in France, was unwilling that England should be free: he seems to have had some presentiment of the happy effects that independence would work for the rival nation. Accordingly he took the ambassadors aside, and prayed them to enter immediately on business with the pon-'We are not here for his Holiness,' dryly answered Gardiner, 'or to negotiate anything with him, but only to do what the King of England commands us.' The tricks of the papacy had ruined it in the minds of the English people. Francis I., displeased at Gardiner's silence and irritated by his stiffness, intimated to the King of England that he would be pleased to see 'better instruments' sent.† Henry did send another instrument to Marseilles, but he took care to choose one sharper still.

Edward Bonner, archdeacon of Leicester, was a clever,

^{*} Le Grand, Hist. du Divorce, i. p. 269.

active man, but ambitious, course and rude, wanting in delicacy and consideration towards those with whom he had to deal, violent, and, as he showed himself later to the protes tants, a cruel persecutor. For some time he had got into Cromwell's good graces, and as the wind was against popery, Bonner was against the pope. Henry gave him his appeal to a general council, and charged him to present it to Clem ent VII. It was the 'hill of divorcement' between the pope and England. Bonner, proud of being the bearer of so important a message, arrived at Marseilles, firmly re olvid to give Henry a proof of his zeal. If Luther had burnt the pope's bull at Wittemberg, Bonner would do as much, but while Luther had acted as a free man, Bonner was only a slave, pushing to finanticism his submission to the orders of his despotic master.

Gardiner was astonished when he heard of Bonner's ar rival What a humiliation for him! He hung his head, punched his lipe," and then lifted up his eyes and hands, as if cursing the day and hom when Bonner appeared Never were two men more discordant to one another Gardiner could not helieve the news A scheme contrived nithout him! A hishop to see one of his inferiors charged with a mission more important than his own! Bonner having paid him a visit, Gardiner affected great coldness, and brought forward every reason calculated to dissuade him from exe cuting his commission -- 'But I have a letter from the king,' answered Bonner, 'sealed with his seal, and dated from Windsor, here it is' And he took from his catchel the letter in which Henry VIII intimated that he had appealed from the sentence of the pope recently delivered ignost him f 'Good,' answered Gardiner, and taking the letter he read 'Our good pleasure is that if you deem it good and serviceable (Gardiner dwelt upon those two words) you will give the pope notice of the said appeal, according to the forms required by law, if not, you will acquaint us with your opinion in that respect. — 'That is clear,' said Gardiner; 'you should advise the king to abstain, for that notice just now will be neither good nor serviceable.'— 'And I say that it is both,' rejoined Bonner.

 ^{* &#}x27;Making a plane mouth with his hp *-- Foxe Acis v p 152
 † Cranner a Memorials Appendix p 8

One circumstance brought the two Englishmen into harmony, at least for a time. Catherine de Medicis, the pope's niece, had been married to the son of Francis I., and Clement made four French prelates cardinals. But not one Englishman, not even Gardiner! That changed the question; there could be no more doubt. Francis is sacrificing Henry to the pope, and the pope insults England. Gardiner himself desired Bonner to give the pontiff notice of the appeal, and the English envoy, fearing refusal if he asked for an audience of Clement, determined to overleap the usual formalities, and take the place by assault.

On the 7th of November, the Archdeaeon of Leieester, accompanied by Penniston, a gentleman who had brought him the king's last orders, went early to the pontifical palace, preparing to let fall from the folds of his mantle war between England and the papacy. As he was not expected, the pontifical officers stopped him at the door; but the Englishman forced his way in, and entered a hall through which the pope must pass on his way to the consistory.

Ere long the pontiff appeared, wearing his stole, and walking between the cardinals of Lorraine and Medicis, his train following behind. His eyes, which were of remarkable quickness, immediately fell upon the distant Bonner,* and as he advanced he did not take them off the stranger, as if astonished and uneasy at seeing him. At length he stopped in the middle of the hall, and Bonner, approaching the datary, said to him: 'Be pleased to inform his Holiness that I desire to speak to him.' The officer refusing, the intrepid Bonner made as if he would go towards the pope. Clement, wishing to know the meaning of these indiscreet proceedings, hade the cardinals stand aside, took off the stoke, and going in a window recess, called Bonner to him The latter, without any formality, informed the pope that the King of England appealed from his decision to a general council, and that he (Binner), his Majesty's envoy, was prepared to hand him the authentic documents of the said impeal, taking them (as he spoke) from his portfolio. Clem ent, who expected nothing like this, was greatly surprised 'it was a terrible breakfast for him,' says a contemporary document.* Not knowing what to answer, he shrugged his shoulders, 'after the Itahan fashou,' and at last, recovering himself a little, he told Banner that he was going to the consistory, and desired him to return in the afternoon Then heckoning the curbinals, he left the hall

37.07 337 Q

^{* &#}x27;The pope whose sight is incredulous quick, eyed me.' — Burnet, Records, iii. p. 38.

Henry's envoy was punctual to the appointment, but had to wait for an hour and a half, his Holiness being engaged in giving audience. At length he and Penniston were conducted to the pope's closet Clement fixed his eyes on the latter, and Bonner having introduced him, the pope re marked with a mistrustful air 'It is well, but I also must have some members of my council,' and he ordered Simon etta, Capisuchi, and the datary to be sent for While wait ing their arrival, Clement leant at the window, and appeared ab orbed in thought. At last, unable to contain lumself any longer, he exclaimed 'I am greatly surprised that his Muesty should behave as he does towards me' The m trepid Bonner replied 'His Majesty is not less surprised that your Holiness, who has received so many services from him, repays him with ingratifude. Clement started, but restrained himself on seeing the datary enter, and ordered that officer to read the appeal which Bonner had just dehvered to him t

The datary began 'Considering that we have endured from the pope many wrongs and injuries (grataminibus et

[#] Ibid p 51

t 'His Hol ness delivering it to the datane, commanded fim to read it. - Burnet, Records in p 23

injuriis).' . . . Clasping his hands and nodding dissent, Clement exclaimed ironically: 'O questo è molto vero!' meaning to say that it was false, remarks Bonner.* The datary continued: 'Considering that his most holy Lordship strikes us with his spiritual sword, and wishes to separate us from the unity of the Church; we, desiring to protect with a lawful shield the kingdom which God has given us,† appeal by these presents, for ourselves and for all our subjects, to a holy universal council.'

At these words, the pope burst into a transport of passion, ‡ and the datary stopped. Clement's gestures and broken words uttered with vehemence, showed the horror he entertained of a council. . . . A council would set itself above the pope; a council might perhaps say that the Germans and the King of England were right. 'To speak of a general council! O good Lord!' he exclaimed.§

The pope gave way to convulsive movements, folding and unfolding his handkerchief, which was always a sign of great anger in him. At last, as if to hide his passion, he said: 'Continue, I am listening.' When the datary had ended, the pope said coldly to his officers: 'It is well written! Questo è bene fatto.'

Then turning to Bonner, he asked: 'Have you anything more to say to me?' Bonner was not in the humor to show the least consideration. 'A man of the north, he took a pleasure in displaying his roughness and inflexibility in the elegant, crafty, and corrupt society of Rome. He boldly repeated the protest, and delivered the king's 'provocation' to the pope, who broke out into fresh lamentations. 'Ha!' he exclaimed vehemently, 'his Majesty affects much respect for the Church, but does not show the least to me.' He

^{*} Burnet, Records, iii. pp. 37-46; Rymer, Acta, vi. pars ii. p. 188.

^{† &#}x27;Legitimo defensionis clypeo protegere.' — Rymer, Acta, vi. pars ii. p. 188.

^{‡ &#}x27;He fell in a marvellous great choler and rage.'—Burnet, Records, 1ii. p. 54.

[&]amp; Ibid.

That conversation possibly decided the separation between England and France. The king showed that he was offended at a course of proceeding which he characterized as unbecoming, and Clement learnt, to his immen e satisfaction, that the English had not spoken to Francis about the council. If you will leave me and the emperor free to act against England, be said to the king, I will ensure you possession of the duchy of Milan's The monarch promised the obedience of his people to the decrees of the paper, and the pope in his joy exclaimed. Questo e per la bont tostra! Bonner, who had not lost sight of the two speakers, remarked that at this moment the king and the pope langhed merrily together, and appeared to be the best friends in the world.

The king having withdrawn, Bonner, again approached the pope, and the datary finished the reading. The Engnshman had not been softened by the mysterious conversation and laughter of Clement and Princis. In was a rough

^{* &#}x27;Wherein the pope snarling '-Ibid p 42

[†] The French king making very low curtiste, putting off his bonnet and keeping it off - Burnet, Records, in p 42

[†] Questi signori Inglesi sono stati qu'à per infimare certi provocationi et appellationi e di fare altre cose " - Ibid

Le Grand, Hutoire du Dirorce 1 p 268

and abrupt as the Frenchman had been smooth and amiable. It was long since the papacy had suffered such insults openly, and even the German Reformation had not put it to such torture. The Cardinal De Medicis, chief of the malcontents, who had come in, listened to Bouner, with head bent down and eyes fixed upon the floor: he was humilinted and indignant. 'This is a matter of great importance,' said Clement; 'I will consult the consistory and let you know my answer.'

In the afternoon of Monday, 10th of November, Bonner returned to the palace to learn the pope's pleasure: but there was a grand reception that day, the lords and ladies of the court of Francis I. were presented to Clement, who did nothing for two hours but bless chaplets, bless the spectators, and put out his foot for the nobles and dames to kiss.*

At last Bonner was introduced: 'Domine doctor, quid vultis? Sir doctor, what do you want?' said the pope. desire the answer which your Holiness promised me.' Clement, who had had time to recover himself, replied: 'A constitution of Pope Pius, my predecessor, condemns all appeals to a general council. I therefore reject his Majesty's appeal as unlawful.' The pope had pronounced these words with calmness and dignity, but an incident occurred to put him out of temper. Bonner, hurt at the little respect paid to his sovereign, bluntly informed the pope that the Archbishop of Canterbury - that Cranmer - desired also to appeal to a council. This was going too far: Clement, restraining himself no longer, rose, and approaching Henry's envoy, said to him: 'If you do not leave the room instantly, I will have you thrown into a caldron of molten lead.' †-'Truly,' remarked Bonner, 'if the pope is a sliepherd, he is, as the king my master says, a violent and cruel shepherd.' ‡ And not caring to take a leaden bath, he departed for Lyons.§

^{*} Burnet, Records, iii. p. 42.

[†] Ibid, i. p. 130.

^{‡ &#}x27;Immitis et crudelis pastor.' — Rymer, Acta, p. 188.

[§] Cranmer's appeal was not written till later, except there be some error in the date. Burnet, Records, iii. p. 24.

Clement was delighted not only at the departure but still more at the conduct of Bonner the insolence of the English envoy helped him wonderfully, and accordingly he made a great noise about it, complaining to everybody, and particularly to Frinces 'I am wearied, vexed, disgusted with all this,' said that prince to his countiers. 'What I do with great difficulty in a week for my good brother (Henry YIII), his own ministers undo in an hour' Clement en dervored in secret interviews* to increase this discontent, and he succeeded The mysterious understanding was apparent to every one, and Vannes, the English agent, who never lost eight either of the pope or the king, informed Cromwell of the close muon of their minds!

When Henry VIII learnt that the King of France was slipping from him, he was both irritated and alarmed Abandoned by that prince, he saw the pope launching an interdict against his kingdom, the emperor invading England, and the people in insurrection ! He had no repose by night or day his anger against the pope continued to increase Wishing to prevent at least the revolts which the partisans of the papacy might excite among his subjects, he diciated a strange proclamation to his secretary 'Let no Englishman forget the most noble and loving prince of this realm' ho said, 'who is most wrongfully judged by the great idol and most cruel enemy to Christ's religion, which calleth himself Pope Princes have two ways to attrun right - the general council and the sword Now the king, having appealed from the unlawful sentence of the Bishop of Rome to a general council lawfully congregated, the said usurper hath rejected the appeal and is thus outlawed By holy Scripture, there is no more jurisdiction granted to the Bishop of Rome than to any other bishop Henceforth honor him not as an idol, who is but a man usurping God's power and

^{*} Hee omnia a pontifice cum rege amotis arb tris tractata - State Papers (Henry VIII) vu p 222

f 'De summa animorum conjunctione '- Ibid p 5°3

¹ Strype, Eccles Mem. L p 22

authority; and a man neither in life, learning, nor conversation like Christ's minister or disciple."

Henry having given vent to his irritation, bethought himself, and judged it more prinhent not to publish the proclamation.

At Marseilles England and France separated: the first, because she was withdrawing from the pope; the other, because she was drawing nearer to him. It is here that was formed that secret understanding between Paris and Rome which, adopted by the successors of Francis I., and more or less courted by other sovereigns of Christendom, has for several centuries filled glorious countries with despotism and persecution, and often with immorality. The interview at Marseilles between the pope and the King of France is the dividing point: since that time, governments and nations in the train of Rome have been seen to decline, while those who separated from it have begun to rise.

CHAPTER XXI.

PARLIAMENT ABOLISHES THE USURPATIONS OF THE POPES IN ENGLAND.

(JANUARY TO MARCH 1534.)

WHILE the papacy was intriguing with France and the empire, England was energetically working at the utter abolition of the Roman authority.† 'One loud ery must be raised in England against the papacy,' said Cromwell to the council. 'It is time that the question was laid before the ^{*} Strype, Eccles. Mem. p. 226 (Oxf. 1822).

[†] State Papers (Henry VIII.), t. vii. p. 526.

people Bishops, parsons, curates, priors, abbots, and preachers of the religious orders should all declare from their pulpits that the Bishop of Rome, styled the Pope, is subordinate, like the rest of the bishops, to a general council, and that he has no more rights in this kingdom than any other foreign bishop?

It was necessary to pursue the same course abroal Henry resolved to send nubassadors to Poland, Hongury, Saxony, Bavaria, Pomerania, Prussia, Hesse, and other German states, to inform them that he was touched with the zeat they had shown in defence of the Word of God and the extripation of ancient error, and to nequaint all men that he was hunself 'utterly determined to reduce the popes power ad justos et legitimos mediocritatis sine modos, to the just and lawful bounds of his mediocritatis.

He did not stop here. Desiring above all things to withdraw France from under the influence of Rome, he instruct ed his ambis adors to tell Frances I in his name and in the name of the people. We shall shortly be able to give unto the pope such a buffet as he never had before? This was quite in Henry's style. Things are going at such a rate here, wrote the Duke of Norfolk to Montmorency, that the pope will soon lose the obchence of England, and other nations, perceiving the great fruits, advantage, and profit that will result from it, will also separate from Rome?

All this was serious there was some chance that Nor folk's prophecy would be fulfilled. The poor pontiff could think of nothing else, and began to beheve that the idea of a council was not so unreasonable after all, since the place, and time of meeting and mode of proceeding would lead to endless discussions, and if the meeting ever took place, he would thus be reheved of a responsibility which became more oppressive to him every day. He therefore hade Henry VIII be informed that he agreed to call a gener il council. But events had not stool still, the pos-tion was not the same. 'It is no longer necessary,' the king answered coldly. In his opinion, the Church of England was sufficient of herself, and could do without the Church of Rome.

The King of France, growing alarmed, immediately resumed his part of mediator. Du Bellay, his ambassador at Rome, made indefatigable efforts to inspire the consistory with an opinion favorable to Henry VIII. According to that diplomatist, the King of England was ready to reestablish friendly relations with Clement VII., and it was parliament alone that desired to break with the papacy forever: it was the people who wished for reform, it was the king who opposed it. 'Make your choice,' he exclaimed with cloquence.* 'All that the king desires is peace with Rome; all that the commonalty demands is war. With whom will you go — with your enemies or with your friend?' Du Bellay's assertions, though strange, were based upon a truth that cannot be denied. It was the best of the people who wanted protestantism in England, and not the king.

The court of Rome felt that the last hour had come, and determined to despatch to London the papers necessary to reconcile Henry. It was believed on the Continent that the King of England was going to gain his cause at last, and people ascribed it to the ascendency of French policy at Rome since the marriage of Catherine de Medicis with Henry of Orleans. But the more the French triumphed, the more indignant became the Imperialists. To no purpose did the pope say to them: 'You do not understand the state of affairs: the thing is done. . . . The King of England is married to Anne Boleyn. If I annulled the marriage, who would undertake to execute my sentence?'—'Who?' exclaimed the ambassadors of Charles V., 'who? . . . The emperor.'† The weak pontiff knew not which way to turn: he had but one hope left — if Henry VIII., as i 'That the emperor would be the executor.' - Ibid. p. 555.

^{* &#}x27;He eloquently declared our king's message.' - Lord Herbert, Life of Henry VIII. p. 396, fol.

he expected, should re-establish catholicism in his kingdom, a fact so important would silence Charles V

This fact was not to be feared. A movement had begun in the minds of the people of Great British which it was no longer possible to stop. While many pious souls received the Word of God in their hearts, the king and the most enlightened part of the inton were agreed to put an end to the intolerable usurpations of the Roman points? We have looked in the Holy Scriptures for the rights of the papery, said the members of the Commons house of parhament, 'but, instead of finding therein the institution of popes, we have found that of langs—and, according to God's commandments, the priests ought to be subject to them as much as the lasty?—'We have reflected upon the wants of the realm,' and the royal council, 'and have come to the conclusion, that the nation ought to form one body, that one body can have but one head and that head must be tho king.' The parliament which met in Japuary, 1534, was to give the death blow to the suprement of the pope.

This blow came strictly neither from Henry nor from Cranmer, but from Thomas Cronnell* Without powers ing Cranmer's heely fauth, Cronwell desired that the precedent should open the Word of God and preach it 'with pure sincereness' before the people; and he afterwards procured from every Frightshum the right to read it. Being preminently a statesman of sure judgment and energetic action, he was in advance of his generation, and it was his true, like those generals who march buddly at the head of the army, to procure victory to the cause for which he fought, but, persecuted by the traitors concealed among his soldiers, to be sacrificed by the prince he had served, and to meet a trigged death before the hour of his triumph.

The Commons, wishing to put an end to the persecutions practised by the clergy against the erangeheal Christians,

^{*} For Cromwell's early history, see the History of the Reformation, vol.

t Lord Cromwell to Parker

summoned — it was a thing unprecedented * — the Lord-bishop of London to appear at their bar to answer the complaint made against him by Thomas Philips, one of the disciples of the Reformation. The latter had been lying in prison three years under a charge of heresy. The parliament, unwilling that a bishop should be able at his own fancy to transform one of his Majesty's subjects into a heretic, brought in a bill for the repression of doctrines condemned by the Church. They declared that, the authority of the Bishop of Rome being opposed to Holy Scripture and the laws of the realm, the words and acts that were contrary to the decisions of the pontiff could not be regarded as heresies. Then turning to the particular case which had given rise to the grievance, parliament declared Philips innocent and discharged him from prison.

After having thus upheld the cause of religious liberty, the Commons proceeded to the definitive abolition of the privileges which the bishops of Rome had successively nsurped to the great detriment of both Church and people. They restored to England the rights of which Rome had despoiled her. They prohibited all appeals to the pope, of what kind soever they might be,† and substituted for them an appeal to the king in chancery. They voted that the election of bishops did not concern the court of Rome, but belonged to the chief ecclesiastical body in the diocese, to the chapter . . . at least in appearance; for it really appertained to the erown, the king designating the person whom the chapter was to elect. This strange constitution was abolished under Edward VI., when the nomination of the bishops was conferred purely and simply on the king. If this was not better, it was at least more sincere; but the singular congé d'élire was restored under Elizabeth.

At the same time new and loud complaints of the Romish exactions were heard in parliament. 'For centuries the ^{* &#}x27;Not fit for any of the Peers to appear and answer at the bar of the House of Commons.' -- Collyers, ii. p. 83.

[†] Collyers, ii. p. 84.

Roman bishops have been deceiving us,' said the eloquent speakers, 'making us believe that they have the power of dispensing with everything, even with God's commandments We send to Rome the treasures of England, and Rome sends us back in return . . a piece of paper The monster which has fattened on the substance of our people bears a hundred different names They call it relicfs, dues, pen sions, provisions, procurations, delegation, rescript, appeal, abolition, rehabilitation, relaxation of canonical penalties, licenses, Peter s pence, and many other names besides. And after having thus caught our money by all sorts of tricks, the Romans laugh at us in their sleeves' Parliament for hade everybody, even the king himself," to apply to Rome for any dispensation or delegation whatsoever, and ordered them, in case of need, to have recourse to the Archbishop of Canterbury Then, immediately putting these principles into practice, they declared the king's murriage with Catherine to be null for 'no man has power to dispense with God's laws,' f and ratified the marriage between Henry and Anne, procluming their children heirs to the crown the same time, wishing England to become entirely English, they deprived two Italians, Campeggi and Glinnico, of the sees of Salisbury and Worcester, which they held

It was during the mouth of March, 1534—an important date for England—that the main brunches of the tree of popery were dius lopped off one after another. The trusk indeed remained nilibough stripped, but yet a few months and that too was to strow the earth with its fall. Still the Commons showed a certain degree of consideration. When Clement had threatened the king with excommunication, he had given him three months' grace, England, desiring to return his politeness, informed the pope that he might receive some compensation. At the same time she made an important declaration. 'We do not separate from the

^{*} Neither the king his successor, nor his subjects to apply to the see of Rome - Collyers is p 84

^{# 1}bd n 85

2.5 %

Christian Church,' said the Commons, 'but merely from the usurped authority of the Pope of Rome; and we preserve the catholic faith, as it is set forth in the Holy Scriptures.' All these reforms were effected with great unanimity, at least in appearance. The bishops, even the most scholastic, such as Stokesley of London, Tonstal of Durham, Gardiner of Winchester, and Rowland Lee of Coventry, declared the Roman papacy to be of human invention, and that the pope was, in regard to them, only a bishop, a brother, as his predecessors had been to the bishops of antiquity.* Every Sunday during the cessation of parliament a prelate preached at St. Paul's Cross 'that the pope was not the head of the Church,' and all the people said Amen.

Meanwhile Du Bellay, the French ambassador at Rome, was waiting for the act by which the King of England was to bind himself once more to the pope—an act which Francis I. still gave him reason to expect. Every morning he fancied it would arrive, and every evening his expectations were disappointed. He called upon the English envoys, and afterwards at the Roman chancery, to hear if there was any news; but everywhere the answer was the same—nothing.

The term fixed by Clement VII. having elapsed, he summoned the consistory for Monday the 23d of March. Du Bellay attended it, still hoping to prevent anything being done that might separate England from the papacy. The cardinals represented to him, that as the submission of Henry VIII. had not arrived, nothing remained but for the pope to fulminate the sentence. 'Do you not know,' exclaimed Du Bellay, in alarm, 'that the courier charged with that prince's despatches has seas to cross, and the winds may be contrary? The King of England waited your decision for six years, and cannot you wait six days?'† 'Delay is quite useless,' said a cardinal of the imperial faction; we know what is taking place in England Instead of thinking of reparation, the king is wideoing the schiem every day. He goes so far as to perinit the representation of dramas at his court, to which the boly conclave, and some of your most illustrious selves in particului, are held up to ridicule. The last blow, although a heavy one, was unnecessary. The priests could no longer contain their vexation, the rebellious prince must be punished. Nineteeo out of twenty two cardinals voted against Henry VIII, the remaining three only asked for further enquiry. Clement could not conceal his surprise and annoyance. To no pur pose did he demand another meeting, in conformity with the custom which requires two, and even three consultations. * overwhelmed by an imposing and onexpected majority, he gave way.

^{* &#}x27;Solum Romanum episcopum et fratrem, ut primis episcopis mos erat.. — Wilkins, Concilia, iii. p. 782.

Herbert, Life of Henry VIII. p. 396. Burnet, Hist. Ref. i. p. 131.

Simenetta then handed him the sentence, which the un happy pope took and read with the voice of a criminal rather than of a judge 'Having invoked the name of Christ, and sitting on the throne of justice, we decree that the marriage between Catherine of Arigon and Henry, King of England was and is valid and canonical, that the said King Henry is bound to cohabit with the said queen to pay her royal honors, and that he must be constrained to discharge these duties' After pronouncing these words the poor pontiff, alarmed at the bold act he had just performed turned to the envoys of Charles V and said to them 'I have done my duty, it is now for the emperor to do his, and to carry the sectence into execution' 'The emperor will not hold back,' answered the ambassadors, but the thing was not so casily done as said.

Thus the great affur was ended, the King of England was condemned. It was dark when the pope quitted the consistory, the news so long expected spread immediately

^{#4} What could not be done in less than three consistories was now despatched in one - Herbert p 397

[†] Christi momine invocato, in throno justitio pro tribunali sedentes. --

through the city; the emperor's partisans, transported with joy, lit bonfires in all the open places, and cannons fired repeated salvoes. Bands of Ghibelines paraded the streets, shouting, Imperio e Espagna (the Empire and Spain). The whole city was in commotion. The pope's disquietude was still further increased by these demonstrations. 'He is tormented,' wrote Du Bellay to his master. Clement spent the whole night in conversation with his theologians. 'What must be done? England is lost to us. Oh! how can I avert the king's anger?' Clement VII. never recovered from this blow; the thought that under his pontificate Rome lost England made him shudder. The slightest mention of it renewed his anguish, and sorrow soon brought him to the tomb.

Yet he did not know all. The evil with which Rome was threatened was greater than he had imagined. If in this matter there had been nothing more than the decision of a prince discontented with the court of Rome, a contrary decision of one of his successors might again place England under the dominion of the pontiffs; and these would be sure to spare no pains to recover the good graces of the English kings. But in despite of Henry VIII., a pure doctrine, similar to that of the apostolic times, was spreading over the different parts of the nation; a doctrine which was not only to wrest England from the pope, but to establish in that island a true Christianity — a vast evangelical propaganda which should plant the standard of God's word even at the ends of the world. The empire of Christendom was thus to be taken from a church led astray by pride, and which bade mankind unite with it that they might be saved; and to be given to those who taught that, according to the divine declarations, none could be saved except by uniting with Jesus Christ.

BOOK VII.

MOVEMENTS OF THE REFORMATION IN ENGLAND, AT GENEVA, IN FRANCE, GERMANY, AND ITALY

CHAPTER I

THE BISHOP ESCAPES FROM GENEVA, NEVER TO RETURN

(July 1533)

WE have seen the Reformation advancing in the bosom of a great nation, we shall now see it making progress in one of the smallest The fall of Wolsey in England and the flight of the hishop prince from Geneva are two historical dates which bear a certain resemblance After the disappearance of the e two prelates, there was a forward movement in men's minds, and the Reformation advanced with more decided steps Those two countries are now, as regards their importance, at the two extreme points in the line of nations, but in the sixteenth century the humble city of the Lemun played a more important part in the Church of Christ than the mighty Ingland Calvin and his school did more than the Tudors, the Stuarts, and their di vines, to cheek the reaction of the papacy and secure the triumph of true Christianity The sixteenth and seven teenth centuries have proclumed Geneva the antagonist of Rome, and, in truth, the petty band which marched under its banner, held their ground for nearly two centuries against the powerful and well di ciplined army of the Roman pontiffs We have not forgotten Wittemberg, we shall not forget Geneva. The historian is not allowed to pass by the little ones who have had their share in the developments of the human mind. To those who repose beneath the healthful shade of the great Gospel oak, and under its green boughs, we must relate the story of the acorn from which it sprang. The man who despises humble things cannot understand great things. 'The Lord,' says Calvin, 'purposely made his kingdom to have small and lowly beginnings, in order that his divine power should be better known, when we see a progress that had never been expected.'

On the 1st of July, 1533, the Bishop of Geneva had returned to his city with the aid of the priests, the catholics, the Friburgers, and the 'mamelukes,' with the intention of 'burying that sect,' as he called the Reformation. Many of the most devoted friends of the Gospel were in exile or in the episcopal prison; hostile bands appeared in the neighborhood of the city, and all expected a victory of the Roman party. The tree was about to be violently uptorn before it had given any shade. But when God has placed a germ of religious, or even of political, life among a people, that life triumphs despite all the opposition of men. There are rocks and mountains which seem as if they would stop the course of the mighty waters, and yet the rivers still run on their way. The exasperated Pierre de la Baume chafed in Geneva, and beat the earth as if to crush reform and liberty beneath his feet; but by so doing he opened a gulf, in which were swallowed up his rights as a prince, his privileges as a bishop, taxes, revenue, priests, monks, mitres, images, altars, and all the religion of the Roman pontiffs.

If the bishop was uneasy, the people were uneasy likewise. It was not only strong men who spoke against the abuses of the papacy, but even women extolled the prerogatives of the evangelical faith. One day (in June or July, 1533) there was a large party at one of their houses, and two gentlemen of the neighboring district, Sire de Simienx and M. de Flacien, 'besides seven or eight of their varlets,' were invited. In their presence the wife of Baudicho la Maisonneuve professed the evangelical truth De Simi eux having reproved the Genevese lady, 'It is very clear you are a good Papi-4,' said she 'And that you are a good Lutherin,' retorted De Simieux 'Would to God,' exclaimed the lady, 'that we were all so, for it is a good thing and a good law'.'* The two gentlemen had lad enough, they took levve of the ladies, and their eight 'var lets' followed them Another meident will still better show the spirit of the times

An evangelical named Curtet had just been murdered. Many buguenots thought it strange that, while their adver strick down a man,—a real image of God,—they must respect images made of wood, canvas or stone. There was a deservedly celebrated place in Genera, formerly occupied by the castle of Gondebaud, King of Burgundy, whence his niece Clothla one day escaped to marry and convert Clovis. It was a very ancient arreade, only pulled down within these few years, f and known as the Porte du Château (the castle gate). Near this place stood an image of the Virgin, an object of great veneration? On the 12th of July, 1533, some 'Lutherans,' believing it to be blasphemy against God to regard the Virgin as 'the salvation of the world,' went to the gate, carried away the image, broke it to pieces, and burnt it.

The bishop, feeling that such men as these were capable of anything, resolved to put the impressed hugenois beyond their reach. A report soon spread abroad that he was secretly prepring boats to convey the prisoners during the night to Friburg or the castle of Chillon, there to do his pleasure on them '$ All the huguenot population was in commotion, each man shouldered his armeebuse and joined his company. Philip, the captian general, ordered the approaches to the lake to be guarded, so as to prevent the captive citizens from being conveyed elsewhere

^{*} Une bonne chose et une bonne I 1" MS du procès juquis tronnel de Lyon (Archives de Berne) pp 200-202

The noble enthusiasm which the Reformation kindles in the soul uplifts a man; while the philosophic indifference of scholars and priests serves but to degrade him. The Genevans, filled with love for instice and liberty, were ready to risk all that they held most dear in order to prevent innocent citizens from heing unjustly condemned, and a prelate sent by the pope from usurping rights which belonged to the magistrates elected by the people. An extraordinary agitation prevailed in men's minds, and several lunguenots proceeded to the shore of the lake. Pierre Verne, taking advantage of the darkness, got into the boats fastened to the bank, and cut the mooring-ropes as well as the cords to which the oars were lashed, so that they were made unserviceable.* Numerous patrols traversed the streets, the armed men being accompanied by citizens, both young and old, carrying montres de feu, that is, rods tipped with iron, having several lighted matches or port-fires at the end, which were used at that time to discharge the arquebuses The dreaded honr when the evil use which princes make of their power accelerates their ruin, had arrived at last for the Bishop of Geneva. De la Banme and his partisans, who watched from their windows the passage of these exeited bands, were surprised at the number of arquebusiers with which the city was suddenly thronged. 'They were informed that for each arquebusier there were three or four match-men, which caused great alarm to those in the palace.' A comet that appeared during the month of July alarmed them still more.† As yet the huguenots wanted a man to lend the way; they were to find him in Baudichon de la Maisonneuve.

The Lutheranism of that citizen was of old date. He was a great friend of John Lullin, who possessed, it will be remembered, the hostelry of the Bear, at that time much frequented by German traders, who were, for the most part, ^{* &#}x27;Ni tirer ni nager' (neither pull nor steer), alluding to the peculiar mode of rowing employed on the lake.

[†] Berne MSS., Hist. Helvet. v. p. 125.

Lutherans Some Nuremburg merchants of the name of Toquer arrived there during the Lent of 1526* De la Maisonneuve, who had much be mess with Germany, went often to see them, 'enting and drinking with them' Their conversation was very animated, and usually turned upon religion As early as 1523 the traders of Nuremburg had heard the Gospel from the mouth of O under, and they endeavored to propagate at wherever they went. Their words struck De la Massonnenve all the more thecause at that time there was no mention of Lutheranism in General or next to none, at least't There was at that time in Lullin's service a young man of Lyons, named Jean Deman about twenty five years of age, and yery attached to the Roman Church While writing at table, he listened attentively to the conversation between Brudichon and the Germans, and kept it in his memory. The daring Geneve e did not restrup himself, and said, sometimes at dinner, sometimes at supper.t 'God did not ordain Lent. It is mere folly to confess to the priests, for they cannot absolve you It is an abuse to go to mas. All the religious orders, mendicants, and others, are nonsense' What, then, will you do with the menks?' asked one of the party 'Set them all to till the earth, he replied 'If you say such things,' observed a catholic, 'the Church will refuse you burnd' 'When I die,' he answered. 'I will have no preaching at my funeral, and no bells tolled. I will be buried wherever I please '$ Baudichon's remarks were not kept within the walls of the hostelry of the Bear Before long they were repeated throughout the city and neighborhood 'That man, said many, is one of the principal Lutherans and in the front rank of the e who set them going'! That is what he was about to do ^{* &#}x27;About eight years ago says an authority of 1634 (MS du proch) inquisitioned de Lyon). The rea's ag of the MS as Toquer, which is probably not the correct spell ag of the German name

[†] Ou du mo sétait-ce co ame rien

I Soit en linant soit en soupant - US de Lyon.

⁴ MS du procès de I von pp 294 297

Les mettent en train - MS du procis de lyon p 185.

On the 12th of July, 1533, Baudichon had passed the day in the country, making preparations for the harvest. Returning from the fields at night, he was surprised to see an extraordinary guard at the city gate, and on asking what it meant, he was told that the episcopalians were going to convey the prisoners to some place of strength. Immediately he determined to compel the bishop - but solely through fear — to follow the course prescribed by the laws. desired fifty of the most resolute of his friends to take each an iron-tipped staff and to place five matches at the end. He then concealed them all in a house not far from the palace. Ere long darkness covered the city; there was nobody in the streets except a few patrols. De la Maisonneuve bade the men of his troop light their matches, and put himself at their head. In their left hands they held the staff, and the sword in their right. Entering the palace, and making their way to the prince's apartment, they appeared before him, surrounded him with their two hundred and fifty lights; and Baudichon, acting as spokesman, called upon him to surrender his prisoners to their lawful judges. The bishop stared with amazement at this band of men with their swords and flaming torches; the night season added to his terror, and he thought that if he did not give way he would be put to death. Baudichon had no such idea; but Pierre de la Baume, imagining his last hour had come,* gave the required order. Upon which the troop defiled before him with their port-fires, and quitted the episcopal palace. The huguenot prisoners having been transferred to the syndics, the latter intrusted them to the gaoler of the same prison 'to keep them securely under pain of death.' They had passed from the arbitrary power of the bishop to the lawful authority of the councils. Constitutional order was restored.†

The bishop passed a very agitated night. The huguenots and the torches and the swords with which he had been surrounded would not let him sleep, and, when daylight came, he, as well as his courtiers, was quite unmained. The 13th of July fell on Sunday, and what a Sunday! 'I shall leave the city,' the prelate said to his servants. A rumor of his approaching departure having got abroad, some of the canons hurned to the prlace to dissaudd. Inm. 'I will go,' he repeated. To no effect did his followers represent to him that, if he left, the eatholic faith, the episcophet, the authority of the prince, his revenues, would all be lost, nothing could shake him. He was determined to go. A Thomas he Becket would have died on the spot, but Pierre de la Baume, says a contemporary document, 'was very warm about his own afety, but more than cold for the church'.

^{*} Sœur Jeanne. Levain du Calvinisme, p. 68.

[†] Registres du Conseil des 10, 11, 12 Juillet. Froment, Gestes de Genève, pp. 62, 63. Roset MS.

One thought, however, disturbed the timid bishop, and the proceedings of the syndies, Du Crest and Coquet, who came to beg him not to desert the city and his flock, served but to increase his distress. If the huguenois knew of his departure, he thought they might possibly stop him and bring him back to the palace. He dreamt of nothing but persecution, he saw nothing but prisons, swords, and corpect. Ho made up his mind to deceive the syndies, and assured them he would return in six weeks without fail, but he prome of himself that Geneva should never see him ngun. He then asked the magnetirates for six score of arquebusiers to protect his departure the next morning.

The syndies having determined to convene the council, the ushers went round the city and roused the conneillors from their beds. Geneva desired to keep her bi hop, while the bi hop wished to desert her. The council ordered that next morning at daybreak, for fear the pichate should leave citly, the syndies should go and point out the necessity for his remaining †

The syndies had scarcely left him when he full into fresh terrors. He thought that the mustering of six-score ur-

^{*} Fort échaussé pour sa propre personne plus que froit pour l'égl n.

—Reg sire du Conseil du 13 Juillet, Fromert, Genés de Conère, p. 61.
Reme MS

[†] Registre du Conse I du 13 Juillet 1533

quebusiers would spread abroad the news of his departure, that the huguenots would rush to arms, that he would find himself between two parties armed with spears and arquebuses. . . . He must make haste and depart alone, by night or at peep of day, without any pavade, before the syndies could have time to assemble the council, which, he fancied, could not meet before the morrow. No one slept in the palace that night; all were busy preparing for the departure, and they took care that nothing should betray to the outside the agitation that reigned within. That was a terrible night. Two spectres appeared to the bishop and dismayed him — the Gospel and liberty. He saw no means of escaping them but flight. But what would the dake and the pone say? To quiet his conscience, he wrote, at the last moment, a letter to the conneil, in which he enjoined them to oppose the evangelical meetings, and to maintain the Romish religion 'mordicus, tooth and nail.'

Daylight would soon appear; they were dejected in the palace, but everything was ready for flight. At that moment there was a knocking at the gate. . . . It was the four syndics; the bishop was a few minutes too late. . . . The syndics entered, and conjured Pierre de la Baume in the name of peace, country, and religion. They pointed out to him the consequences of his departure; the monarchical power crumbling away, the republic rising upon its ruins, the Church of Rome disappearing, and that of the innovators taking shape. . . .

But nothing could move the bishop; he remained insensible as a statue. They next entreated him to leave the state affairs in order; to appoint, during his absence, a vicar, an official, a judge of appeal. Pierre de la Baume refused everything. One only thought filled his mind—he wanted to get away. 'Alas!' said the moderate catholics, 'he does not set the state in order, and as for the church over which he is pastor . . . he abandons his flock.'* When the syndies and withdrawn, he gave the signal for departure. There was not a moment to lose, he thought, it will oon be broad daylight, and who knows but the magn trates, who set so much upon his presence, may give orders to stop him Let every man do his duty! Let there not be a minute's delay! The bishop took care not to leave the palace either by the principal entrance or by the ordinary gates of the city In the vaults of the building was a passage which led to an unfrequented street - the Rue du Boule, now tle Rue de la Fontaine By following this street, the bishop could reach a secret postern in the will of the city, which Froment calls la fausse porte du sel Then Pierre de la Biume would be ontade of Geneva, then he would be safe Accordingly the hishop quitted his apartments, descended to the basement of the palace, and made his escape from that edifice (which is now a prison) like a malefactor escaping from his dungeon His officers were downcast, they would have wished to crush those insolent huguenots but were obliged to leave them a clear field. The bi hop lumwelf, forced to quit his palace and his power, felt great vexation He looked about him with unersiness, and trembled le the should see the huguenots appear at the corner of the street. The encroachments he had made on the liberties of the citizens were not of a nature to tranquillize him, and in his distress he quickened his stens

^{*} Le Curé Besson. Mémoires pour l'Histoire Ecclésiastique du Diocèse de Genève, p. 63.

The fugitive band reached the secret po tern, the prelate had the key, he passed through and stood on the shore of the lake There was no enemy in eight. He entered a boat which had been got ready for him, and reached the other bank. He spring munediately upon the love that was waiting for him, and rode off at a gillop He felt the weight upon his heart grow lighter the further he went Now the fierce huguenots will trouble him no more, and le will 'make good cheer' 'He retired to the Toner of May,' iny the chronicle, 'and never returned again' † expectations. Not only had the prisoners been resented from the unlawful power of the bishop, but the prelate himself had disappeared. A few hughenots, waving their montres de feu, had been sufficient to deliver Geneva. Not a drop of blood had been shed. 'As at the sound of the trumpets of Gideon, and at the sight of his lamps,' said the evangelists, 'the Amalekites and the Midianites fled during the night, so did the bishop and his followers flee away at the sound of the arms and at the sight of the fire.'

Baudichon de la Mai onneuve had succeeded bejond his t Roset MS

Early in the morning of the 14th of July, the news of the bishop's departure circulated through the city. catholic members of the council, deserted by a perjured prince, felt themselves unable henceforth to oppose the torrent which was advancing with irresistible power. 'All the catholics,' says Sister Jeanne, 'were sorely grieved.' The pope blamed the bishop for abandoning his church, and reproached him for his cowardice. † 'That miserable city, having lost its prince and pastor,' said people in Italy, 'will become the asylum of every villain and the throne of heresy.' Dut what caused so much sorrow to the papists was the source of immense joy to the evangelicals. They contended that the prince by running away abdicated his usurped power, and that the citizens resumed their rights. § The sun of Geneva was setting, according to the old style (that of the Roman court); but according to the new (that of the Gospel), it was rising; and Geneva, illumined by its rays, was to communicate that divine light to others. The 14th of July, 1533, witnessed in Geneva the fall of that hybrid power | which claims to hold two swords in its hand. Since then other bishop-kings have also disappeared, even

^{*} Froment, Gestes de Genère, pp. 62, 63.

[†] Le Curé Besson, Mémoires pour l'Histoire Ecclesiastique du Diocèse de Genève, p. 63.

[‡] Briève Relation de la Révolte de la Ville de Genève. MS. in the Archives Générales du Royaume d'Italie, paquet 14.

[§] Letter to Lord Townsend, by the Secretary of State Chouet. Berne MSS. vi. 57.

If twas also on the 14th of July, two centuries and a half later (1739), that the reign of the feudal system came to an end.

in the most eathouse countries, and the last, that of Rome, totters on his pedestal. The people of Genera, from the time when they lost sight of that shameless and pittless pre late, censed to care about him, and never rasked after him. They even invented a by word, in use to this day, and when they wish to speak of a man for whom they feel a thorough indifference, they say Je ne men source pas plus que de Baume [I do not care a straw about him].

CHAPTER II

TWO REFORMERS AND A DOMINICAN IN GENEVA

(JULY TO DECEMBER 1533)

The bishop had fallen from his throne, and with him I ad expired a despotism which offensively usurped fito liberties of the people, the lawful magistrates once more sat in their circule chairs, with liberty and justice at their sides. They investigated the cases of the citizens whom Pierre de li Brume claimed to get rid of without the formality of trail. The only man who could be accused of Wernly's death was Pierre I Hoste, and he had taken refuge in the Dominican chuich, where the bishop had not cared to follow him. The syndies went to the church, the poor wretch, shaking in every limb, ching vainly to the altir, and cried out. If claim the privileges accorded to this sanctinary. He was arrested and the iriquiry commenced. It proved the innocence of the impri oned higuenots, and showed that the di turbance in which Wernly fall had been caused by the violence of the canon himself, who was armed from head to foot, and had taunted his adversaries with loud cries. The magistrates, however, thought that the blood of the victim called for the blood of him who had shed it. Pierre l'Hoste, the carman of the city, denied striking the fatal blow, but confessed that he had struck Wernly: he was condemned and beheaded. All the other prisoners were released.

* I care no more for I m than f r Baune that is not at all. This express on owes its ong n to the name of La Ba ne last bishop of Geneva Glassares Generas de Gaudy et da J Humbert.

But there was no relief to Claudine Levet's sorrow; her husband was still confined in Castle Gaillard, and the governor refused to release him. The council entreated the Bernese deputies in Geneva to intercede in behalf of the prisoner, and on the 4th of September, one of them, accompanied by J. Lullin and C. Savoye, having gone out to Ville-la-Grand, about a league from the city, Aimé Levet was surrendered to them.*

While this pious man lay in the Gaillard dungcons, the insults heaped upon him, the harshness of the prison, and the almost certain death which threatened him, had given his faith a new life; so that when the castellan had released him from his bonds, he inwardly vowed that he would make his deliverance accelerate the triumph of the Gospel. had scarcely reached home, when he wrote to Anthony Froment, the evangelist, whose church had been the market-place, and whose pulpit a fishwife's stall, and conjured him to return. The latter did not hesitate, and knowing that the struggles which awaited him there were beyond the strength of one man, he invited one of the brethren from Paris, and at that time in the Pays de Vaud to accompany him. This was Alexander Canus, called also Dumoulin. One day, therefore, Aimé and Claudine Levet saw the two evangelists arrive. One lodged with them at St. Gervais on the right bank, and the other at Claude Salomon's, near the Molard, on the left bank; being thus quartered in the two parts into which the city was divided, they could share the labor.

^{*} Registre du Conseil des 6, 7, 8, 12, 17, Août et 4 Septembre_1533.— Froment, Gestes de Genève, p. 60. Roset MS. liv. iii. ch. xvi.

Salomon, who shared with Levet the honor and danger of receiving the evnagchets, was as gentle as his friend Maisonneuve was quick and often violent. One day, shortly after the bishop's flight, the latter saw in front of him in the street two of the bishop's partisans, whom he suspected to be getting up some conspiracy, his blood boiled at the sight, and he exclaimed 'there are so many trutors here My fingers sich to be at them '. A sense of duty, however, restruned him, and he did nothing But Salomon was calm and full of charity and compassion he felt none of the e passing chillitions, and thought only of visiting the sick and the poor, and sheltering strangers whom the Romish persecutions drove to Geneva 'These poor refu gces, he said, 'are more destitute than all the rest' His wife, 'neither dunty nor nice,' this hed her cares on them They were the Gains and Dorcas of Scripture

Froment and Alexander, quartered on both sides of the Rhone, preached the Word in private houses with such power that the new faith extended far and wide, 'like the layers of a vine, 't the old stocks producing young shoots, which took root and formed other stocks. The priests were alarmed, and exclaimed that if those doctrines con tinued to be so preached, all the country would soon be in fested with the sect. They applied to the bishop, who was at his eastle of May - restless agitated and reproaching hunself with his desgraceful flight. Wishing to redeem that fault, he replied on the 24th of October, forbidding any preaching in Geneva except according to ancient custom The exulting priests presented these episcopal letters to the council The hishops cowardly behavior had creaged the magnetrates. Preach the Gospel, answered the council, and say nothing which cannot be proved by Holy Scripture These important words, which give the victory

1 . A la façon des provins

^{● *} La main me fourm lle que je n ag «e contre les traitres l † Nullement del cate ni m gnarde - Froment restes de Genere p 68. Peciatre du Consell d s 12 Octobre 1 35

formers,'* resolved to apprehend them. Whenever a meeting was formed, the sergeants came upon it unexpectedly. But as soon as they saw the levelled halberds, the faithful, greatly increased in number, did their duty, surrounded their ministers, and helped them to escape.' In consequence of this, the episcopal police went more craftily to work: they kept watch upon the ministers, and came upon them when they were alone, 'aiming at nothing less than their lives.'† But these efforts of the priests increased he respect men felt for the evangelists. 'Such persecutions' said the lunguenots, 'are a sign by which we may know that the ministers are excellent servants of Christ.'‡

The bishop, vexed at having left his episcopal city, could find rest nowhere. At one time he was at the Tower of Mny, at another at Lons-le-Saulnier, now at Arbois, now elsowhere. The thought that two reformers had come to take his place in Geneva disturbed him; and when he found that the citizens paid no attention to his strict prohibition of Gospel preaching sent on the 24th of October, his exasperation was at its height. 'We must apply an heroic remedy to the disease,' he said, and on the 20th of November he dictated letters patent addressed to the procurator-fiscal.

The Great Council met on the 30th of November to hear the letters read. 'We command,' eaid the hishop, 'that no noe in our city of Geneva preach, expound, or cause to be preached or expounded, secretly or publicly, or in any manner whatsoever, the holy page, the holy Gospel,'s unless he have received our express permission, under pain of perpetual excommunication and n fine of one hundred livres.' The Two Hundred were estounded, the exangelicals were indigmant, and the better catholics lung their heads. A bishop

^{* &#}x27;Fort envenimés contre les deux réformateurs.'

^{† &#}x27;Ne voulant pas moms que la jacture de leur vie.'

[‡] Froment, Gestes, p 68

^{§ &#}x27;Neminim clam, palam, occulte vel publice sacram paginam, sacrum Frangelium exponere aut alias quomodocumque dicere' — Gaberel, Lettres palentes de l'Irèque Pièces pustificatives, i. p. 42.

to forbid the preaching of the holy page, of the holy Gospel!
. . . to forbid it too in the very season (Advent) when it was usual to proclaim it! To excommunicate all who preach it! To forbid its being taught in any manner whatsoever! To forbid them to talk of it in courts or gardens, or elsewhere! Not a room, not a cellar, kitchen, or garret was excepted! The Apostle Paul declares, however, that the Gospel of Christ must not be hindered. The emotion of the Two Hundred was so great that all deliberation became impossible; 'the whole council rose and went out,' we read in the minutes of the sitting. Such was the mate but energetic reply made by Geneva to its bishop.

In the city the emotion was still greater, and vented itself in murmurs and sighs, and also in ironical jests. 'Have you heard the news?' said the huguenots: 'the bishop is going to issue an order with sound of trumpet, forbidding us to speak either good or evil of God and Christ.' The silly prohibition was like oil thrown upon the fire: the preachings became more frequent, and even the indifferent began to read the Scriptures. Froment and his friends distributed evangelical books in abundance: first the New Testament, then various treatises recently composed, such as La Vérité cachée, La Confrérie du Saint-Esprit, La Manière du Baptême, La Cène de Jésus-Christ, and Le Livre des Marchands.* De Vingle, the printer, and one of his men, named Grosne, helped them in this work. But the papists sometimes treated the colporteurs roughly; a gentleman of the neighborhood, having eaught Grosne on the high road, cut off his ears.† This had no effect; the people thirsted for the truth, and all were eager to hear the Word of God.

The leaders of the episcopal party, seeing that nothing could stop these precheurs de cheminées (chimney-preachers) and their hearers, looked about for a preacher whose energetic eloquence might rekindle the expiring Roman fervor,—

^{*} The Hidden Truth. The Brotherhood of the Holy Ghost. The Manner of Baptism. The Supper of Jesus Christ. The Tradesmen's Book. † MS. du procès inquisitionnel de Lyon, pp. 6 et 7.

one of those stout champions who can deal heavy blows in serious contests. For three or four centuries the Dominicans had played, as mountor, the chief parts in the papacy. they were skilful, elognent, shrewd in government persevering in their designs, inflexible in dogma, productl of threats, condemnations, and the stake. There was much talk in Savoy, and even in Geneva, about one of them, - a doctor of the Sorbonne, named Guy Furbity, - 'a great theologian,' they said, 'an enthusiastic servant of the pope, n sworn enemy of the Reformation, during and violent to the last degree.' * Just then he was preaching at Chambéry and Montmeillan, charming all hearers. The Genevest catholies petitioned the Sorbonne for this great prencher Such a rock, transported to the valley of the Leman, would, they thought, check the desastating torrent of reform Their prayer was granted, and Furbity flattered himself that he was going to win a fairer crown than all his predecessors Proud of his order, his reputation, and his Church, he arrived in Geneva with haughty head, glaring eyes, and threatening gestures, one might have imagined that he was going to crush all his adver tries to powder 'Ah! those poor Lutheruns, he said disdunfully, those poor chimney-preichers!' 'He was in a passion,' says Froment. The huguenots said as they pointed him out, ' Look at that Atla, who fancies he carries the tottering Church of the Roman pontiff on his shoulders 't

A plot had been formed, of which Furbity was to be the cluef instrument. The syndres, Di Crest, Braid, Mullumson, and many other good Generans had been gained over by the present to the cause of the pope, and by this ment the latter held in their braids the council, the treating, the artillery, and, in one word, the city property, beads the ignorant populace § The Sorbonne doctor had hardly

^{*} Berne MSS H & Role v 12.

^{† .} Il éta t enflambé " - Froment, Geries

^{† &#}x27; l'elut alter Atlas qui la tanti cause catholice succollaret ' - Genero

¹ h meut, Gestes de benece pp 65-83 La Saur Jeanne, Leraun de

ž

क्यां क्यांस स्थाप Mosel, any and states (brise for * 37 4 CE TE - 78 - 75 TPI IFE b In 19750 r-fools eter begands a surv excerns ads sommed base bomes of word the bread, b E. a noto efros felenmentos 3... rectly day as often as be lear 14 to Jest Chat exe #

TENERAL TO THE

ĭ

٦

750

1

in that or he als

Crad to des head at to be rea

and cor morber the boly Qua

for ou hely the logal bank

r staled fout sill and ser't

a sugui beell ob m ur

adban We med believe that

O mal to tool at man stated

bob and a borny shib magd

be all b de dictace of ca.

The was not enough, the Dec

- PARTITUD LINED E

angelighter top the

rad degree, * Just then her transled of the Reformat the ologism, they said, an enthe doctor of the Sothonne, named talk in Saroy, and even in Gene threats, condemnations, and the reing in their designs, infexi they neve shiftly eloquent shr cans had played, as inquisitors, th a ro sorti To' L'or three or i one of those stout champions who i comental this return of cuit tagan sao estut sa gama Treed in Genera with haughty Froud of his order, his reput was going to win a fairer cron header was granted, and Burl thought, check the devastating a roch, transported to the valle oles perchaned the Sorbonne le ind Montmeillan, charming all i

Colonius p. 10 fd someon op sooren thround f road wanney tinabent lug ealif tolla tuls f * 1 t amuri - danteline tatell f * Beme 3124 II at Hele v 12 the ignormit populace 5 the artillery, and, in one " ed nitter beld in their bei by the pric is to the equason, and many other good G chief instrument The 5md y blot jud been formed, (t' srabluoda ant no 'liu fancies he carries the tottern

note said, as they pointed him c

cust, He us na passion' Lutheraus, he said di danfulli gave life to Jesus Christ once, whereas the priest creates him every day, as often as he likes. If a priest pronounces the sacramental words over a sack full of bread, or in a cellar full of wine, all the bread, by that very act, is transformed and becomes the precious body of Christ, and all the wine is changed into blood—which is what the Virgin never did. . . . Ah! the priest! . . . you should not merely salute him, you should kneel and prostrate yourselves before him.'

This was not enough; the Dominican thought it his duty to establish the doctrine of transubstantiation, on which the dignity of the priest is founded. He exclaimed: 'We must believe that the body of Jesus Christ is in the host in flesh and bone. We must believe that he is there as much as he was in the Blessed Virgin's womb, or on the wood of the true cross. We must believe it under pain of damnation, for our holy theological faculty of Paris at the Sorbonne, and our mother the holy Church, believe it. Yes; Jesus Christ is in the host, as he was in the Virgin's womb, . . . but small . . . as small as an ant. It is a matter that admits of no further discussion.'

Whereupon the Dominican, satisfied that he had gained a signal victory, indulged in the impetuosity of his clerical haughtiness, and, pouring out a torrent of insults, exclaimed: 'Where are those wretched Lutherans who preach to the contrary? Where are these heretics, these ruscals, these worse than Jews, Turks and heathens? . . . Where are these fine chimney-preachers? Let them come forward, and they shall be answered. . . . Ha! ha! They will take good care not to show themselves, except at the chimney-corner, for they are only brave in deceiving poor women and such as know nothing.'*

Having spoken thus, the monk sat down, proud of his eloquence. A great agitation prevailed in the congregation; the reformers were challenged to the combat; the people wondered whether they would reply to the challenge.

^{*} Froment, Gestes de Geneve, pp. 69-71. Gautier MS.

Te of bid! !

218 In proces inquisionaci de 1 Jon, p 23

" 1 ve I ant à les cun page les Induisant de toute sa poss blit, Le"-$221 as surt 17 np wio i we entregell of any attached to the trial, in the Registres du Cot et al. Surmment, he sad, is abore the Holy Virgin, for she only of Mary 'A pricet who consecrates the elements of the language that and t have sounded strange to the norshippers coull bring souls into communion with God. He even u ed that percent only, by serine of the sternmental mentations, of we iring the robe, are dressed like brigands, he in uni mired Continuing to insult the reformers as 'wretches who, mele al table-bed, and this he undertook to do in other discourses. restore the pripacy, its fundamental doctrines must be es-The Dominican saw elearly that abuse alone would not guol evoled not no oth drutch of el w

nother him hold his tongue A more telling intertupion hie ichee is chough here t But they had some trouble to nt being disturbed in their devotions, sud 'Begone, one what he was expand The enhance mound him, annoyed came re-cless, and evel uned that the pre relier did not know James, unable to part up with such meulting lunguing, bean Genera for their zeal in belialf of the Remish futh Pictre Pennet, whose brothers were soon to become fundual Pieric's, ho eat donn ne ir sonic good catholies, unoug others to ot oney gurrell 1-compared foll out at banel brd those who hetened to hum to embrace the faith which Luther իւթ այլ այդ հուսարություն օգտիստուծ ունան թարարարություն grable, he was present everywhere, he held discussions in cilled the collonier, or nimorer. His zetivity was indefitpikes, indicrits, streins, and arrows, whence he was usually abuse ness one Junus, a men of small striure, a multer of Among the exampleheals who hetened to this string of better give them them to the dogs." nise, and do not let their marry your dimenters. Lou had Here no dealings with them in the n of business or otherence these German, as you would of lepets and tottenness. . Bearing of these herthin Turks and inid dogs *

gave life to Jesus Christ once, whereas the priest creates him every day, as often as he likes. If a priest pronounces the sacramental words over a sack full of bread, or in a cellar full of wine, all the bread, by that very act, is transformed and becomes the precious body of Christ, and all the wine is changed into blood—which is what the Virgin never did. . . . Ah! the priest! . . . you should not merely salute him, you should kneel and prostrate yourselves before him?

This was not enough; the Dominican thought it his duty to establish the doctrine of transubstantiation, on which the dignity of the priest is founded. He exclaimed: 'We must believe that the body of Jesus Christ is in the host in flesh and bone. We must believe that he is there as much as he was in the Blessed Virgin's womb, or on the wood of the true cross. We must believe it under pain of damnation, for our holy theological faculty of Paris at the Sorbonne, and our mother the holy Church, believe it. Yes; Jesus Christ is in the host, as he was in the Virgin's womb, . . . but small . . . as small as an ant. It is a matter that admits of no further discussion.'

Having spoken thus, the monk sat down, proud of his eloquence. A great agitation prevailed in the congregation; the reformers were challenged to the combat; the people wondered whether they would reply to the challenge.

^{*} Froment, Gestes de Genève, pp. 69-71. Gautier MS.

shouted the huguenote on all sides their shouts nere useto me scut' pique his pead in the pulpir. Let him mewer, by such plain presiges, dared not ri e, but remained fixed answer that ' Lurbity, astonished at hearing lumself refuted of them looking towards the monh, called out 'Let him tions 'It is the truth, exclaimed the reformers, and some queed scriptural authorities against the Dominican's 2.3erend is false, and the language of Antichrist' He then adshow, by Holy Scripture, that what Dr Furbity has jut effer noy life — yes, I am ready to go the stake it I do not and the evengelist, with sonorous voice, exclaimed 'Sirs, I turned their eyes on the person who uttered these nords, thaten to what I have to tell you!" The congregation his band to be silent. 'For the love of God,' he said, strading in the middle of the church, motioned them with There was a momentary pruse, when Froment to e, and han off. The tumultuous crowd made a last effort to key proment, either to see him or to strike him, or to carry utec ted hun . They crowded upon one another, says the people rin after him, and the magistrates would have turn out of the church. This did not calm the turnell, others ribled round burn like a body gward, we hing to get do la Musonneure, Ann Perrus, Iran le Collonur, and Just 2s the priceds were about to carry him off, Budichon him!' -- ' Liere was no small commonion, writes Proment . Burn hun -- burn hun!' and others ' to the Rhone with they should durn or drown the evangelish. Some shoulted on which these churchmen were not agreed at was whether sentured to contridict a pricet There was only one point ing but death could expente the ermo of a les men who had wretch! he has dared take our good father to task' Noth chance 'Kill lum - kill the Lutherant . . Alt the swords in the o times), and appreaching Tromeot, exin their line. They drew their snot ds (priests often nore dumb, rentured upon a control ery which was much more The ernons and their friends, finding their oracle was hold of the evangelist, just as they reached the great doors of the cathedral. Baudichon de la Maisonneuve observing this, halted, drew his sword, and, facing the rioters, cried in a loud voice: 'I will kill the first man that touches him. Let the law prevail; and if any one has done wrong, let him be punished.' The catholics, intimidated by Maisonneuve's look, shrank back; and Froment's friends, taking advantage of this favorable moment, dragged him away from his enemies. Then, 'the women, as if they were mad, rushed after him with great fury, throwing many stones at him.'* The huguenot Perrin, more politic than evangelical, alarmed at the tumult, said to Froment: 'We have spoilt the business; it was going on very well, and now all is lost.' The other (by which words Froment indicates himself), sure of his cause, answered simply: 'All is won!' The future showed that he was right. When Froment arrived at Baudichon's house, - the usual asylum of the friends of the Gospel, - Le Collonier took him up to the hayloft and carefully hid him under the hay. De la Maisonneuve and Janin had afterwards to pay dearly for their kind offices. The latter had scarcely quitted the loft when Claude Baud arrived with his officers and his halberds. 'They searched the house all over, and even thrust their spears into the hay, but finding nobody they withdrew.' †

Alexander, who had not spoken in the church, had accompanied his friend as far as the great doors. Seeing Froment led away by Janin, and believing him safe, he halted 'at the top of the steps in the midst of the people,' and, not permitting himself to be intimidated by the popular fury, he exclaimed: 'He very properly took him to task. Doctor Furbity has preached against the holy books; he is a false prophet.' The syndics, pleased to catch one at least, carried Alexander off to the town-hall, and some demanded that he should be sentenced to death. The age Balthara received that "I that no consect the upon." It was not the small the Erms of France may perhaps take some opportunity grants our city in yo put his subjects to death. The two 'Mahometats' were banashed for life from the city, under pant of de tith, we put his should be fold it was agreed that the Advent preachers should be fold to preach the Go pel only, in preacher to another than or deliations.

^{* &#}x27;Les femmes comme enragées . . . de grande furie, lui jetant force pierres.' — Froment, Gestes merveilleux de Genève, pp. 71-74 Sœur Jeanne, Levain du Culvinisme, p. 70. Gautier MS.

[†] Registre du Conseil du 2 Décembre 1533.

Alexander was conducted by the watch out of the city to a place called La Monnaye, where, seeing the crowd following bins, be three for the bins of service as over, He may rest like a solder whose time of service as over, He wan to the Gospel De la Mansonicare instruction in the layloh, and a home, wont in search of Proment in the hyploh, and a home, wont in search of Proment in the hyploh, and a loon at it was night, the two frenchs quitted Genera secretly took any Alexander at La Monnaye, and then all three set of the beautiful that the layer of the beautiful that the layer of the beautiful that the layer of the layer o

CHAPTER III.

RUBEL, MAISONNI UVE, AND FURBILL IN GENERAL.

(Decknink 1553 to Janlant 1534)

Ds. LA Merson was determined to uphold the hiberty of Coopel per technic "We are called Leinbernst," thou, Leider We for me and Eroment, "tow, Leider We Grunn me me as deep, and there is nothing the art in the fib pel of Jean Christial Liberton in case, as the crass, of the liberton case, as the crass, of the Liberton case, as the crass of the Liberton case, deeped in comparing.

the scalous inguence desired to propagate the

He told all his friends (of whom he had arrival at Berne. many) what was going on at Geneva. Froment and Alexander, who stood by his side, supported his complaints and repeated the insults of the Dominican. The Bernese were exasperated by the abuse the monk had heaped upon the protestants, but they were animated by a nobler motive. They had thought that Geneva, so famous for the energetic character of its citizens, would be a great gain for the Reformation; and now people were beginning to say in Savoy, in the Pays de Vand, at Friburg, and in France, that the reforming movement was crushed in the huguenot city. 'A great ramor,' says Farel, 'spread everywhere touching Geneva, how that Master Furbity had triumphed in his disputations with the Lutherans.' * The Bernese resolved to assist the threatened Reform by despatching to Geneva . . . not large battalions, but a humble preacher of the Gospel. They sent William Farel as Maisonneuve's companion.

On Sunday, December 21, the feast of St. Thomas of Canterbury, Furbity, proud at having to eulogize so heroic a saint, was more energetic than ever. 'All who follow that eursed sect,' he cried, 'are lewd and gluttonous livers, wanton, ambitious, murderers, and thieves, who live like beasts, loving their own sensuality, acknowledging neither a God nor a superior.' These words raised the enthusiasm , of the eatholies, the chief of whom resolved to go in a body to the bishop's palace to thank the reverend father. noble Perceval de Pesmes, capitaine des bons, 'the captain of the good, as the nuns called him, was at their head. 'Most reverend father,' said the descendant of the Crusaders, 'we thank you for preaching such good doctrine, and beg you will fear nothing.' - 'Hold fast to the sword, cantain; on my side I will use the spirit and the tongue.' The eompact being made, the deputation withdrew.

^{*} Lettres certaines d'aucuns grands troubles et tumultes adrenus à Genève, avec la disputation faite l'an 1534. This pamphlet is dated April 1, 1534, and is from the pen of Farel, though the printer describes it as being by a notary of Geneva.

They had scarcedy quilted the episcopal palace, when a strange report circulated through the lown. 'De la Maisonneuve has returned from Berne and brought the convocations of the second with him!' Brarel having remotorious 'Wilsiam Farel with him!' Brarel having remotorious 'Wilsiam Farel with him there on the component, and east of component and east of the brarels, that deals whom we drove out is Maineausen, and others, meeting farel and Maineauser in they were recented by some buguenote. The episcopanies in they were recented by some buguenote. The episcopanies consulted together, and decided to take up arms to palican consults and tell upon palican consults and tell upon them; they were recented by some buguenote. The episcopanies is referred to the consults and tell upon palican consults and tell upon palican consults and contract and tell upon the consults are consults and tell upon the consults and the consults and the consults and the consults are consulted to the consults and the consults and the consults are consulted to the consults are that each man would state each thing without learner to he said, on the occasion of his decusion with Frabity pined prudence - with zeal, impartiality. 'Would to God. fiable to fits of violence and temper. With energy he com He was not, as is sometimes inngined, a hot-beaded man, in the order of nature - the most powerful of God's agents. country enclosed between the Alps and the Juri what fire is Saviour, and, in the order of grace, he was in that beautilul he censed not to expose his life in flerce combats for the lees great, his name lees illustrious than his successor's; but and France. A noble and simple crangelist his genius was former of that city as well as of other places in Switzerland already accomplished outs ardly. Furel is really the reworld. But when he surived at Genera, the Reform 14.13 he bas set forth is making, and will make, the circuit of the simple powerful constitution. The scriptural faith which gave to the renorated Church a body of disinity and a tury. Calvin defended it against dangerous enemies; he are the great men of the Reformation in the sixteenth cencarry out the plan they have conceived. Calvin and Luther obstactes, and set in motion all the forces of their epoch to etrong men who, by the energy of their will eurmount all was a hero. A work that is beginning requires one of thoso Not without reason were the catholics plarmed. Farel one side more than to the other.'* But it must be acknowledged that he had more force than circumspection, and an unparalleled activity was the principal feature of his character. To venture everywhere, to act in all circumstances, to preach in every place, to brave every danger, were his enjoyment and his life. His excessive genius 'delighted in adventure,' as was said of a celebrated conqueror, and he was never so truly happy as when he was in the field. Farel began the work, and Calvin completed it.

Another man, a layman, was called to play a part not less important in the Genevan Reformation. It has been remarked that in the great revolutions of nations, God sometimes gives not a counsellor to be listened to, but a torrent to be followed. There was indeed in Geneva a mighty torrent rushing towards Reform, and the man who personified that popular force was Baudichon de la Maisonneuve. Noble in heart as in race, at first he had been merely an independent politician and an opponent of the papacy; but, opening his house and his heart to the Gospel, he came to love it more and more every day. Certainly he did not possess all the evangelical graces; he was somewhat of a jester, and might often be found laughing at the superstitions of his times. Occasionally, also, he was violent in his acts and words. But the republican energy that characterized him made him the fittest man to cope with Rome, the Duke, and the Inquisition. Strong, proud, immovable, he was on a small stage, what the Elector of Saxony and the Landgrave of Hesse were on a larger stage, the patron of evangelical doctrine. Although of noble descent, he was in trade, and had an extensive business. Rich and generous, he provided for the wants of the new creed. The magistrates of the cities with which he had dealings showed him much consideration; and not only did the puissant republic of Berne intercede in his favor, but

^{*} Lettres certaines d'aucuns grands troubles et tumultes advenus à Genève, avec la disputation faite l'an 1534, avant-propos.

[†] Thiers on the Insurrection in Spain.

but if Bertheher's death was the most heroic, Baudichons former introduced the reform They were both proneers, her the latter began the undependence of the city, the ago !  De la M n onneure had much nilinity with Beribe sion of Genera. Would to God he bad died ten years bigoted catholics exclaim. He is the cause of the perruthis city are what those in Reme are now. This mak the m es correspondents , You shall pay me when the price es in later, when settling his accounts at Lyons, he eaid to one of masses are celebrated at Liusanne. Iwo or three months Generan said to him . Lou shall pay me when no more canne dealer was buying one of his hor es, the confident about the trumph of the Reformation One day, as a Lau King Trancis I also De la Musonneuve had no double lives sooner! De la Maisonneuve calmed his friends, he The entholies of indicates exclaimed it shall cost us our doctor?' and invited the reformers to enter the building minister (Tarel) preach in the church as well as a polith some of the reformed and, boldly 'Why should not our Dominican having preached with great colat in the eithedral, unite prudence with energy On the 21st December, the De la Maisonneuve was able, in case of necessity, to the was the most exempling

again t God Jour preacher has attached us, we stall ou, and at the same time you tokrate men who bla lieme prople attached to the Holy Word whom we commen led to , Must 1, they said, 'you expel from your city our serrants, in the letter from the cheefs of the machty Bernese regulne the next day he appeared before the council, and hunded eparegr a the try legal means, and ask the magnifules for a at these two requests. They were about to deliberate on Inplicit, The larger portion of the council was natounded we all for a place is which kniel may preach the Gapel prosecute him, and call upon you to arrest him Morasor, them when a commotion was heard in the street. A plot had broken out.

292 '655 '861 *MS du procès inquisitionnel de Lyon Archites de Berne, pp. 34.

It was near midday. Between eight and nine hundred priests and laymen were going to the bishop's palace, where they had appointed a meeting. In the palaee everything was astir; the eellars were open, and the servants were running about with bottles in their hands. 'They supplied wine in profusion, and every man promised to do his duty. They were respectable-looking people and well dressed.' Two hundred men were to stop at St. Pierre's to attack the Aereties in the rear. All the others were to go down to the Molard, 'burning for the cause of God,' and attack Baudielnon's house, where Farel was to be found.*

De la Maisonneuve, understanding what was going on, hastily quitted the eouncil-chamber, and ran to defend his home.† His first eare was to hide Farel as well as he eould, and then, while preparations were making to storm his house, he took steps for its defence. But the eouncil, learning what was going on, left the hôtel de ville, and ordered the bishop's partisans to lay down their arms. It seemed strange to do so, after so many protestations and so much zeal; yet they obeyed. 'The wicked build triumphs in the air,' said the huguenots, 'and all these reports ended in smoke at last.' !

Farel left his hiding-place and resumed his preachings in the houses; but his audience had a singular appearance. In front of the minister might be seen the proud features of the huguenots, with helmets on the heads, swords by their sides, and some were armed with chirass, arquebuse, or halberd; for, since the last eatholic resort to arms, they feared a surprise. Bandichon natched over the a-caubly. Wearing an alberet (a sort of light breatplate), and holding them their places, and whenever he chanced to boxing them their places, and whenever he chanced to boxing them their places, and whenever he chanced to boxing them their places, and whenever he chanced to boxing them they conversation, bidding them be shout; than favore mould begin to special or produced to the conversation.

^{*} Registre du Conseil du 22 Décembre 1533. Froment, Gestes merveil leux de Genève, p. 78. Sœur Jeanne, Levain du Calvinisme, p. 71. Lettres certaines d'aucuns grands troubles, &c.

[†] Recent investigations indicate that this house was situated in the Rue basse du Marché, in front of the Terraillet.

^{‡ &#}x27;Les méchants se bâtissent des triomphes en l'air, et tous ces bruits ne sont finalement que fumée.'— Lettres certaines. Froment, Gestes de Genève, p. 79. Sœur Jeanne, Levain du Calvivisme, p. 73.

* ε⊧9n 9dT'

The syndices placed between the reformors and the catholdes, could not tell what to do. If they arrested Furbin, they would eva-perate the exhibotes and Strop.nd-s; if they allowed him to continue has philoppies against the reformed,
allowed him to continue has philoppies against the reformed,
field noticed the therefore re-ode of leave the Dominian ostensibly at large, at the same time treating him in rebity tended by six guards, who followed him freed to the foot of the pulpar. Allos! verdamed his friends, they have placed the reverend father in the keeping of the match?
In on hughring which the monk observed, bunding the
for nothing.
For nothing,
Corn-tunate and account of a set of people who are good Corn-tunas and orarized, the Dominican had a very me Orn-tunas and orarized. The Orominican had a very me nor one addience, particularly of nonene. Incur-o embales on the alters, the chains re-ounded in the choir; the thillies in the choirs, the chains re-ounded in the about the many of must thereby with such a receiver the man of must be a chain of the chain must be the chain of the chain and the most worthless of men.'* Thus ended the year 1583.

* Proment, Gestes de Genere, p 79 315 du jeweds in ju sut mbel da

11 d anninespe mp

The new year was to make the balance incline to the side of the Reformation; accordingly the clergy, as if terrified at the future, resolved to destroy the tree by the roots, and inaugurated the first day of the year 1534 by an extraordinary proclamation. 'In the name of Monseigneur of Geneva and of his vicar,' said the priests from all the pulpits, 'it is ordered that no one shall preach the Word of God, either in public or in private, and that all the books of Holy Scripture, whether in French or in German, shall be burnt.'† The reformed, who were present in great numbers in the church, were staggered at the new-year's gift which the bishop presented to his people. The Dominican, who was preaching that day for the last time, outdid the proclamation, and bade farewell of his audience in a paltry epigram:—

Je veux vous donner mes étrennes, Dieu convertisse les luthériens! S'ils ne se retournent à bien, Qu'il leur donne fièvres quartaines! Qui veut si, prennent ses mitaines!

Notwithstanding his invocation of the quartan ague, the catholics said, with tears in their eyes, 'With what devotion he takes leave of us!' All, however, had not been equally touched: just as the monk was preparing to depart, his guards stopped him, for he had forgotten that he was a prisaner.

Meanwhile the episeopal mandate was causing disturb-^{*} Registre du Conseil des 27 et 28 Décembre. — Gautier MSC. — Ruchat, ii. p. 245.

[†] MSC. de Roset, liv. iii. ch. xvii. — Registre du 1 Janvier, 1534. — Spon. L. p. 50. — Ruchat, iii. p. 244. — Roset and Farel, both contemporaries, and in a position to know the truth, report the fact that the Holy Scriptures were to be burnt. The minutes of the council do not mention it; but the secretary occasionally toned down what seemed too strong for a council the majority of which was at that time catholic.

[‡] Prendre ses mitaines, a figurative expression for prendre ses mesures. -- Lettres certaines, &c.

Froment, Actes de Cenere, p. 80 to appear predic, thought it their duty to yield a little, and Seriptures taken away from them The reformed, desirtud arms around the watchifres, being unwilling to have the Consequently all abke passed the days and nights under Dible was the best means of getting rid of the bishop not troublug themselves about that matter, thought that the no more Christ, no more salvation The political huguenois seemed that if there were no more Scripture, there would be en from them, Jesus would also be lost to them, it evangeheal Christians believed that, if the Bible were tak teenth century with the manners of the mueteenth. The and it would be reliculous to exhibit the men of the six way that great emotions displayed themselves at that epoch, armed men because of the Word of peace It was m this It was a strange sight, no doubt, to see a town filled with They were obliged to give the purveyors r strong escore." cure provi tons, the other party often seared the spoil or druh, and when any party sent to a house to prodesire to keep it. These poor folks had often nothing to eat to the reformed, they would have answered ' Because we drive out the Bible and if the same question had been lut this?' they would have answered 'Because we desire to Rope to the catholics and asked them 'Why are you dong taken up arms from other motives. If any one had now and hindling great fire. The cuizens of Geneva had often third, and a part of the fourth, bivounching in the squares, of the first of January, but also during the second, the They remained under arms not only during the night the others to defend it. evangelicals took up arms - the former to destroy the Bible, wery men to condemn at to the flames!! Thus catholics and Those who are charged to preach the Word of God are the the Koran, or the Ghebers with the books of Zorozster The Mahometans never did anything like it with regard in raid some, 'burn the holy books! What a horrible notion! prevailed upon Alexander to withdraw, as he had been lawfully banished. He turned his steps in the direction of France, where he soon after found a martyr's death. But the evangelical cause in Geneva lost nothing, for, as Alexander left on one side, Froment returned on the other; and almost at the same moment an embassy from Berne, headed by Sebastian of Diesbach, appeared at the city gates. These worthy deputies, seeing what was going on, - the bivouacks, the soldiers, the spears, and arquebuses, - stopped their horses, examined the groups with an air of astonishment, asked what it all meant, and finally exhorted the rival parties to withdraw. The Genevese began to understand the strangeness of their position: the huguenots felt that it was a different power from that of their arquebuses which should defend the Bible; the men of both parties, therefore, yielded to the wise remonstrances of the Bernese, and every man retired to his own house.*

Diesbach and his colleagues came with the intent of prosecuting the Dominican; but while shutting the door against the monk, they desired to throw it wide open to the Reformation. Farel had been at Geneva some time; Froment had just arrived; but that was not all. A man of modest appearance, who formed part of the Bernese retinue, was to be more formidable to Roman-catholicism than the illustrious ambassadors themselves. They had with them the young and gentle Viret. Weak and faint, he was still suffering from a wound inflicted by a priest of Payerne, but the deputies of Berne had insisted on his accompanying them. Thus Farel, Viret, and Froment - three men of lively faith and indefatigable zeal - were going to work together in Geneva. Everything seemed to indicate that the reformed bands of Switzerland were unmasking their batteries and preparing to dismantle those of the pope. They were about to open a sharp fire, which would beat down the thick walls that for so long had sheltered the oracles and exactions of the papacy.

^{*} Froment, Gestes de Genève, p. 80.

cepted, but ' on condition that the monk should be obliged to to let the Dominican appear before them. The Bernese acthese words the premier syndic, becoming alarmed, offered Berne. 'We give you back our letters of alliance.' At to the prince-bishop," -- 'That is a mere evasion, answered It is not our business to know what concerns priests; apply vindicating her honor. The syndics replied to the Bernese: If you refuse these requests, Berne will find other means of preachers who will show him the falseness of his doctrine. Let the menk defend what he has taught: we have brought ing yourselves in conformity with the trenty of alliance? destand it, and banish those who preach it: is that conductholy Gospel of God, you maltreat those who desire to unconnect; , Lon quebies ont mode of fixing, you condemn the minican who slanders our good reputation, they said to the But the Bernese wanted more: 'You protect that Dothem. \ answer the ministers before all the people, † That n as the escential point.

*Faralla, Formerina, Virelus mira pursels parietes in practicands Del verte Consert resolute, Formers in the Same - Yromen, Gretts de Greer,

1 MSC, de Roese, Cheva, Thu nu ch xvan — Yromen, Gretts de Greere, pp. 80, 31 — Registre de Consead dus Lasavier.

CHAPTER IV.

THE TOURNAMENT.

(JANUARY TO FEBRUARY 1534.)

THE 9th of January was an important date in the history of the Reformation of Geneva, and perhaps (we might add) in that of Europe. The laity were about to resume their rights: a priest was to appear before the Genevese laymen and the Bernese magistrates. As soon as the Council of Two Hundred had assembled, the ambassadors entered, followed by three persons who attracted the special attention of all present. The eyes full of fire, the bold bravery, the indomitable features of one of them marked him to be Farel. The second, less known, had, although young, the prudence of a man in years and the sweetness of a St. John; this was Viret. The third, short in stature and of mean appearance, decided in his gait, lively, and talkative; this was Froment. They all took their seats at the right of the premier syndie. The friar of the order of St. Dominic, entering in his turn, sat on the left on a raised bench. They had met to attack and defend the papacy. The tournament, at which a great crowd of gentlemen and citizens was present, resembled one of those 'solemn judgments' to which man had had recourse for ages to terminate certain controversies. The subject of the dispute was more important than usual. Truth and tradition, the middle ages and modern times, independence and slavery, were in the balance. All, therefore, who were interested in divine and human things, waited with impatience. Their expectations were disappointed.

Just as the struggle was about to begin, one of the combatants hung back. The Dominican rose and said: 'Messieurs, I am a monk and doctor of Paris; I cannot appear then I will reply not only to I'rrel, Virel, and I'roment, but doctors from Germany, and we will select the from Paris, connect , I've my lords the unbassadors select as Judges 1700 give an account of their failt. The Dominican said to tho Spamefull' exclumed many, 'all these priests rein c to '03 ob of our nobbidiol end qodsid odT' ansh ered thes made the same request to the official, M de Vergy, who mawer, but this digmenty replied 'I am ill' Tho depudies then sent to ask the grand vicin to give him leave to ing this humilition, he again refused to speak. The synduit his place of honor and go to the bar, but normithsiand Aon shall hear the test , The monk of St Dominic had to you, leave that place and sit on the bench yonder, where , since you will not answer when our lords of Beine secuso that in France ' Good father, said the premier syndic, their senses in Paris, be added 'Let him go and speak like how the strappado and the stake brought such cavillers to pe pisq nothing to do with that man, Then, remembering dared speak to hun, said, with a gesture of contempt, that gument, but looking with pity on the individual who had heathen' The monk forbore to reply to this invincible ar-Coear was certainly a layman, and what is more -- a the priests at Jerusalem, and appealed to Casar Dow opinions, 'St Paul refused, in such a cire, to appear before served, that the monk and the great apostle were of contrary tures, and now you want a beence. Parel rose and obof Diesbach, to defend your position by the Holy Scrip , Xon offered before all the people, and Sebra ian perore laymen without the heense of my piclate. He eat to a hundred or two hundred of each preachers.

Alone I will meet them all!! The Dermeet desired they would that the matter to those only who nere having menthoursed They wanted more Thousen alone they having themselves that the log-can identify and the part of the Dominway to precipe a decrease there desire to see the Edformation freely precipe and energy and to Dominway to precipe a decrease the precipe and they way to precipe a decrease the manufacture of the way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease the manufacture of the
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the precipe and
way to precipe a decrease of the prec

out one of the parish churches and appoint a preacher of the Gospel to it. Those who wish to go to the sermon, will go to the sermon; those who wish to go to mass, will go to mass; every man is to remain free in his conscience; no one shall be constrained, and all will be satisfied.' 'We are only laymen,' answered the astonished syndics; 'it is not our business to choose preachers and assign them churches.' The council sent a deputation to Berne to soften the rigor of the chiefs of the state; but it was useless. The greater the suppleness (to use the language of a manuscript) shown by the Genevans, the greater the inflexibility displayed by the Bernese. It was a struggle between the pliant and the rigid; and the pliant, as usual, were compelled to give way.*

The Bernese ambassadors pursued their plans with vigor, and demanded reparation for the insults of the Dominican, and a church for the preachers of the Gospel. 'If you refuse,' added Diesbach, 'we shall return you the seals of our alliance; we shall take back ours; we shall prosecute the monk . . . and whomsoever we think fit.' Two Hundred were astounded, involuntary tears escaped from the eyes of some, and even the people outside were much disturbed (says the Council minute). Joining deeds to words, Sebastian of Diesbach placed the letters of alliance on the table. The whole assembly immediately rose up with indescribable emotion, and with tears begged the ambassadors to take back their letters. 'We will do our best to satisfy you!' exclaimed the premier-syndic, stout Catholic as he was. The stern Bernese noble was touched. 'We take them back,' he said at last; 'but we protest that we shall return them if you do not satisfy our demands.'t Everything was then prepared for the trial. Geneva undertook to bear the axe into the wilderness of church

^{*} Registre du Conseil des 10, 11, 12 Janvier, 1534. — Ruchat, iii. p. 251, 252. — MSC. de Gautier.

[†] Registre du Conseil des 25 et 26 Janvier, 1534. — MSC. de Roset, liv. ii. ch. xviii. etc.

spinees. a priest, recused by laymen, was about to be tried courage, his erect head and confident look showed that he of justice, Furbity was brought before them. He had taken On the 27th January, the Two Hundred sitting as a court by laymen. This in itself was a revolution.

mquiry on account of the sacerdotal chrincier with which he nese to set forth their grievances, but protested agunst the believed himself sure of victory. He called upon the Ber-of executioners divided the robe of our Striour Jesus ABBASSADOR - You preached publicly that four kinds was invested Then the following colloquy took place .-- mans That word concerns us. Christ at the foot of the cross, and that the first nere tier-

Mork. - I never used such words; and I do not know said that those who eat meat on Friday and Saturday are AMBAS - We will prove this charge presently. You to what country the executioners belonged.

MOVE. - I did not mean thereby to offend their Excelworse than Jews, Turks, and mad dogs.

AMBAS. - You said that all who read the Holy Sornplencies of Berne, I uas preaching only to the people of

MOYE. - I affirm that I have not abused my lords of gluttons, drunhards, blasphemers, murderers, and robbers. tures in the vulger tongue are no better then lend breve

AMBAS. -- You spoke in a general manner, and conse-.enred

Most mas speaking to the Genevese only. quently included them in your accusation.

sons. Do not let them marry your drughter, you had enes, these Germans, as you would lepers and unclean per-Anna - You said: ' Avoid these wicked modern her-

Monn. - I deny haring presched that article better give them to the dogs."

"awollow of no bound ad or tilguo bun . . . egob are on that account the derd's flock and norse thu mad will not obey the pope or the cardinals, bishops, and curries Anna .- You said . 'That the modern heretics, who MONK. — That is an article of faith, and I have not to answer for it before you.

PREMIER-SYNDIC. — You are commanded to answer Monk. — I shall not answer.

PREMIER-SYNDIC. — The charge is confessed.

AMBAS.—' Most honored lords, we belong to those who read Scripture in the vulgar tongue. We belong to those who hold our Lord as sole head of the Church, as its everlasting and sovereign pastor; and, moreover, we are Germans; and for this reason we believe the said articles have been uttered against us. If we were what these articles say, we should deserve corporal punishment; and therefore we demand, in terms of the lex talionis, that the said preacher be visited with a punishment similar to that which we should have incurred.'

The reasoning of the ambassador was not irrefutable. Envoys from Zurich, Basle, and other Evangelical cantons, even from the landgrave of Hesse or the elector of Saxony might just as well accuse the monk of having insulted them. But it is precisely this which explains the conduct of the Bernese deputies. Protestantism had been abused, its fundamental principles trampled under foot. The Bernese did not prosecute the monk in order to avenge a personal affront; what they wanted was to see the Word of God set in the place of the word of the pope, and the Reformation established in Geneva. The Gospel was on trial and not my lords of Berne; but the latter considered themselves the champions of the Reformation in Switzerland, and when enemies attacked it, they thought it their duty to defend it. To have kept out of the lists would have been disobedience to the supreme judge of the combat. The ambassadors brought up fourteen witnesses ready to swear that the monk had said what was ascribed to him.*

Furbity seeing no other means of escape, determined to fight for Rome. On Thursday, 29th January, a rumor

^{*} Registre du Conseil du 27 Janvier, 1534. — Lettres certaines d'aucuns grands troubles.

ebread through the city that the monk would hold τ discus

THE REPORMATION IN FULDIE

222

BOOK AIL

present at this important struggle number of other causens, met in the Hotel de Ville to be sion with the reformers | The Iwo Hundred, and a certain

quence and sonorous voice, his clear, energeite, and at times tions of the Semptures of God Poscessing a manly elemonk a scholzstic arguments by the invincible demonstra warrior advencing to defend it and ready to confound the titcks of dialectics but full of love for the truth, firm as a other side was Parel less experienced than his rival in the over his errors and rendering them less apparent † On the of every neapon and possessed a particular art of glozing flow of nords * At once violent and skilful, he made use vals to ellence, and a tongue furnished with an mexhaustible front of adament, lungs strong enough to reduce all his ri ward with scholastic learning that was not to be de pised a one side the Dominicin, the champion of Rome, came for no erei an in experiments were in the lists. On One of the tourneys of the Reformation at Geneva was Touched by his words, the resembly exchanged 'Yes, yes' old year in forth I walnest consent to forfer my hile bler triumph than to see the truth prevail So that it be strive to get the better of the other We can have no noness let us therefore speak with all mildness. Let not one The reformer rose that and said 'This is a serious bust t seem revor and tronical language, did prompt justice upon the cophi ms of Ju Igment, thou shalt come unto the pure is, and thou shalt Denteronomy 'If there arise a mitter too hard for thee in things that are not in Scripture, and to prove it, he quote t He maint uned that the heads of the Church may orden burbity began by reserting the authority of the pope. that is what we desire?

If circles at buse - Pers us. 69 d rs · burb tot am as s nuoso cui firma latera, frons ferren. — Graces restate ebeere to do according to all that they inform thee's

Farel, on the contrary, maintained the authority of the Holy Scriptures, and declared that all doctrine must be founded on them alone. He called to mind that God, in this very book of Moses, had said: 'Ye shall not add unto the Word which I command you, neither shall you diminish aught from it.* 'What is said of the Levitical priest in the Old Testament (he added) ought to be applied, not to the Romish priests, but to Jesus Christ, who is the everlasting high-priest. To him, therefore, we must go, him we must obey, and not the priest.'† 'Christ,' exclaimed Furbity, 'gave to St. Peter the key of the kingdom of heaven, and St. Peter transmitted it to the priests, his successors.' 'The key of the heavenly kingdom, answered Farel, is the Word of If any one believes in the promises of grace with all his heart, heaven opens for him. If any one rejects them, heaven is closed against him.

As it was growing late, the discussion was adjourned to the next day, and Furbity said haughtily that he was ready. A voice from the midst of the crowd called out: 'Endeavor to hold more to the Word of God and less to the teaching of the Sorbonne.' 'I shall behave like a man,' he answered. 'If the strength of a man consists in his want of sense, then you are a true man,' rudely returned the speaker.

The next day the discussion entered upon a new phase.

Farel maintained throughout the right and duty of the Christian people to read the Scriptures, to understand them, and to submit to them alone. Furbity, on the contrary, asserted that the Scriptures should be read by the clergy only, and understood conformably with the interpretation of the councils. He proved his point by reasons which might have some force in the eyes of his friends, but they had none for Farel, who maintained the necessity of the immediate contact of each Christian soul with the Scriptures of God. It

^{*} Deuteronomy iv. 2.

[†] Farel indicated the passages taken from the following chapters: Hebrews v. to x.; Romans xiv.; Matthew v.; Luke xxiv.; John v. vii. xii. xiv.; Romans xv.; Galatians i.; Deuteronomy xviii.

booble are no more called by you mto council than dogs and Lon cat and shape as you please The Christian you do everything you are everything! nof inc aposites took contrel with the whole assembly of the believer, own fancy, without any regard to God or the right. The Scripture makes no mention Xou do everything to your mates, cardinals, popes, and other superiorities of "huch number of emmences, br-hops, prelates, archbishops pri minican, 'you introduce diversities of orders a countless herriage 'Lou invent all oris of things, be sud to the Dodignitaries who, in the Romish Church, are loids over God's he declyimed energy tically against the institution of all tho e ing, therefore, the rights of the lay members of the flock, ter with . The aposites and elders and brethren ? Defend elders, and of the unhole church, and did it not began its letaccording to the account in the Acts, composed of apostles, Jerusalem (ordinarily termed the first council), was it not, cente by faith the truth which saves The fir tassembly at from the Word of God itself that every Christian must rewas not from councils (he contended) nor from popes, but

Ah I sire, the Saviour was not such here below umphant Jesus, who shall put to death all who contradict In courts, and governments You want to have a rich tra ure to teach the people to be princes with lordships, estates, others in pride, pomp, and feasing. You want those who pe trodden under foot Lour papal mon trehy surpasses an brutes. Your ordinances must be adored, and those of God

I trity is there between the Apostolic Church and yours? bunshed, imprisoned stoned and hilled What sumhe was poor, humble, put to death, and his disciples were

No ! Jesus 14 not in the midst of 3 ou communications, they did not, like you, imprison and con The aposites did not, the you, fulmin its fiere ex The supreme argument in Jours is the executioner are Church the Gospel, as the martyrs were in the time of the primiis in the midst of those who are expelled, beaten, burnt for

* Lettres ce tames, &c., by Farel

The reformer's energetic words sounded like a peal of thunder to his antagonist. Furbity was confounded and bewildered; his ideas became confused; he lost his presence of mind, and, wishing to establish the doctrine of the episcopate as it is understood at Rome, he quoted the verse in which it is said that a bishop ought to be the husband of one wife, which greatly amused the assembly. He did more: desiring to prove that there had been bishops of the Roman model in the apostolic times, he mentioned Judas Iscariot. 'It is written of Judas,' he said, 'his bishopric let another take: Episcopatum suum accipiat alter. As Judas had a bishopric, he must of necessity have been a bishop;' and he concluded there was no salvation out of the Roman episcopate. doctor had not kept his promise to behave like a man. Farel smiled at the strange argument, and began to lash the Dominican with the scourge of irony. 'As you have quoted that good bishop, Judas,' he said, 'Judas, who sold the Saviour of the world; as you have asserted that he had a diocese, pray tell me in what part of the Roman empire it lay, and how much it was worth, according to the customary language of Rome. That bishop, whose name you use, is very like certain prelates who, instead of preaching the Word of God, carry the bag,* and instead of glorifying Jesus Christ, sell him by selling his members, whose souls they hand over to the devil, receiving money from him in exchange.' †

The monk, astonished at such boldness, again exclaimed in a threatening manner: 'Go and repeat what you say at Paris, or any other city of France.' So sure was he that the evangelist would be sent to the stake there that he could not refrain from repeating such a peremptory argument. It was all that Farel would have desired: 'Would to God that I were allowed to explain my faith publicly,' he said; 'I should prove it by Holy Scripture, and if I did not, I would consent to be put to death.'

^{*} Au lieu de porter la Parole de Dieu, portent la bourse.

[†] Lettres certaines.

As the discussion went on, the feelings given inflamed on both sides — some defending Furbity, others supporting Fried

No one was more residuous at the verbal tournament than Baudeleon de la Marsonneuve, he accompanied the germgeluch champon, boln as he went to the meeting and returned from th being mariling to leave to others the case of protecting his person. The exhibites did not fail to notice the contant goings and comings of the great chizen, it quite for protecting this person. A young man of five and twothy. In the most disgraceful. A young man of five and twothy. In the most disgraceful A young man of the and twothy following his busines who was born at Pontang, as league and a following his busines a with a relative in Geneva, specially following his busines a with a relative in Geneva, specially thom the city and the or a relative to the specially specially maken the set.

The disputation near on all through Taday. The mark het on Sourday, and the Feest of the Purincation which fell on Jonaly, including the fortunation of the Purincation which fell on Jonaly, interrupted to the Purincation which fell on Jonaly, interrupted to the Europe Source main the fortunation of the people with letter Europe had been dependent on the interpretation of the manual five fortunation exempts the corresponding the corresponding the corresponding to the confidence of the fortunation of the excited by the discussions manifested itself in violent speeches in the surrounding districts. The idle, the curious, and the devout would stop and question travellers 'to learn the great news from Geneva which they so desired to know.' Many priests and monks preached in the villages round the city against heretics and heresy; and in Geneva, as well as in other places through which Farel had passed, there was always some friar or old woman to tell strange stories about the reformer. 'He has no whites to his eyes,' they would say; 'his beard is red and stiff, and there is a devil in every hair of it. He has horns on his head, and his feet are cloven like a bullock's. . . . Lastly — and this seemed more horrible than all the rest — he is the son of a Jew of Carpentras.' †

But the sensation was not confined to that city the anger

^{*} MSC du drocés nques monnel de 13 on, p. 80

All these stories, flying about the city, reached the Tête-Noire inn, where the Bernese and the three reformers lodged. The domestie life of this hostelry was not edifying. The landlord (according to the ehroniele) had two wives: his lawful spouse and a servant who aeted as the mistress. The former, an upright person, behaved becomingly to the preachers of the Gospel, though she did not like them; but the other woman detested them, and every time they entered the house, both master and servant seowled at them. They restrained themselves however before the illustrious lords of Berne, greeting them with forced smiles; but made up for it when they were alone with the preachers. The latter usually dined together; and the landlord and servant, while waiting on them, heard language from the lips of the evangelists which greatly provoked them. Instead of the idle stories and jests so common at the dinner-table, the three ministers would exchange words of truth with one another; and this conversation, so new to the two listeners, caused ^{*} Lettres certaines d'aucuns grands troubles, &c. This work, which is dated Geneva, 1st April 1534, and consequently appeared two months after the discussion, is the principal source whence we have taken our account of these discussions.

[†] Froment, Gestes de Genève, p. 86

them to make wry faces (as Froment records, who saw them to make wry faces (as Froment records, would city our view three guests by a searcely quitted the most are the present and the landlord, what they more away with a saying a great deal, went away with way withous poying (that use saying a great deal, provided it was a long way off a saying the included it was a long way off we should never see them again. These two nicities discondented the man and the further and the face on demonst the both discondent in the face of the land of the labels condemmed there was should never see them again. These two nicities discondents for the labels of solds World was worked on those who proclaimed ness of God's World was worked on those who proclaims.

* ' boodaeddgaan oilt at tits trong a erw time all the gossip- of the quarter knew it, 'at "hich there Yes, I saw them through the hole ' In a short moving brekn rids and forwards under the table their clans were crooked and pointed their eyes flushed fire, devils were like black eats district did not binder the servant from continuing did I see? They nere feeding derils 1. The neighbors proaching the door, I peeped through a hole MIN were going to bed I stole up softly after them, and, ap what I have eeen ' caid she, 'one night as the preachers sangran ylno , gaidiyave everything 'Only imigna herself in another manner. Addressing one of those wo-Herodias serred John the Baptist, eays Froment, avenged 'The adulterous servant, unable to serve the preachers as we are great that in the nonghborhood.

To this story of the scream, the priests added their, and a read "There are three devils in Genora in the form of man — Parel, Vivel, Froment, and many demonstrate the extron three gobins, they will grantly upon you, enter into your body, and you are done tor? The article merely with repeating such absentions in their controlled merely with repeating such absentions in their controlled merely with repeating such absent one their controlled merely with repeating such a present a property of the present the present the present the property of the present the present to the property of the present the present three derils. Acxt a soug was written on them, and

piqI 1

ere long the catholic mob went up and down the streets singing these rude rhymes:—

Farel farera,
Viret virera,
Froment on moudra,
Dieu nous aidera
Et le diable les emportera.*

The popular epigram was mistaken. At the very moment when the catholics were singing it about the city, tragic events were coming that were to change everything in Geneva. It was the Roman Church that was about to veer and popery to depart.

CHAPTER V.

THE PLOT.

(JANUARY AND FEBRUARY 1534.)

In the sixteenth century a consciousness of justice, truth, and liberty was awakening throughout Christendom, and men were beginning to protest everywhere, particularly in Geneva, at the lamentable perversions of social and religious life imposed by popery in times gone by. But the expiring Middle Ages rose energetically against this awakening which was to condemn them to be reckoned among the dead. The object of the struggle going on was to secure the triumph of the Reformation — or, as others expressed it, the triumph of progress and civilization. This struggle is the supreme interest of history. The intrigues of courts,

* Farel shall depart, Viret shall veer (go away); Froment (corn) shall be ground in the mill; God will help us, and the devil shall run away with them all. Froment's Gestes de Genève, pp. 84-86.

ness of Gods Word was vented on those n ho proclaimed disorderly lives, and the batred they felt ton rids the holi people felt that the doctrine of the Bible condemned their we should never see them again. These two nretched indi gnol os provided it was a long way off "(pop poel a Lacke was pup) Lacked printes bean poes mans!, I had rather, said the landlord, that they after them 'Heretres! traitors' brigand I buguenots! Ger when the servant, who had restrained herself, would cry out them) The three guests bad scarcely quitted the room them to make wry faces (14 Froment records, who caw жыла рас ытымдын дагон жан noder the table their clans were crooked and pointed their cyes flached fire, devils were like black cats dismay did not binder the servant from continuing 'The e did I ece? They were feeding devils! The neighbors proaching the door, I peeped through a hole What were going to bed, I stole up softly niter them, and, up what I have seen and she, 'one night as the preachers nagam ylao ' Baidiyisəsə thode mobier tr siriq oliv usan herself in another manner, Addressing one of the e wo-Herodirs serred John the Baptist eays Froment, avenged 'The ndulterous servant, unable to servo the preachers as

Les, I saw them through the bole ' In a short

To this story of the servant, the priests added their, and was a great stir in the neighborhood 🔭 time all the gossip of the quarter knew it, 'at nhich there three devide heat a song neas written on them, and ver-ation the presets began to preach to the people upon 'tl e enti-tied merely with repeating such absurdities in their con you, enter into your body, and you are done for † 200 ever you listen to the e three gobins, they will spring upon men - Farel, Virel, Froment, and many demonites. If and 'There are three devils in Genera in the form of ere long the catholic mob went up and down the streets singing these rude rhymes:—

Farel farera,
Viret virera,
Froment on moudra,
Dieu nous aidera
Et le diable les emportera. *

The popular epigram was mistaken. At the very moment when the catholics were singing it about the city, tragic events were coming that were to change everything in Geneva. It was the Roman Church that was about to veer and popery to depart.

CHAPTER V.

THE PLOT.

(JANUARY AND FEBRUARY 1584.)

In the sixteenth century a consciousness of justice, truth, and liberty was awakening throughout Christendom, and men were beginning to protest everywhere, particularly in Geneva, at the lamentable perversions of social and religious life imposed by popery in times gone by. But the expiring Middle Ages rose energetically against this awakening which was to condemn them to be reckoned among the dead. The object of the struggle going on was to secure the triumph of the Reformation — or, as others expressed it, the triumph of progress and civilization. This struggle is the supreme interest of history. The intrigues of courts, ^{*} Farel shall depart, Viret shall veer (go away); Froment (coru) shall be ground in the mill; God will help us, and the devil shall run away with them all. Froment's Gestes de Genève, pp. 84-86.

The Bishop of Geneva writehed attentively from his sheat free Pishop of Geneva writehed at aloosee, at that time a bassing in his alooseed, at that the double strangely aguated. He desired to reacceral his double himsely aguated. It desired to reacceral his basis of the prince and the pope in the city. Alany catholie, epochal capped in the city aloose of desirate but 'a popular immely an this course of the basis and the duke, could result see noth a line in the reformation of doctrine but 'a popular immely will soon change,' they said. Exhips it Calvin had not will soon change,' they said. Exhips it Calvin had not will soon change,' they said. Exhips it Calvin had no other will soon change,' they said. Exhips it Calvin had no other any time that so they could be a connected to the prophecy maps had been a The temperature of the property and the change in the connected the power of the ponniff would ere long sweep in the property of the property order easily became assassins 110114 And hence, strange to say, preteoded preserrers of provided they attained in end which they believed to be gio, weie eineere men, but everything was good in their eres sixteenth century nas a moral revival In eatholicism there was the bluming of the moral sen e, and the reviral of the rejected it One of the great evils springing out of popery cause the former welcomed the Reformation and the latter and if France has not yet been able to secure them, it is be-England has so long enjoyed the precious fruits of liberty. grees the breath of hife to individuals and to nations If sary they should eleave to the sovereign M ister, who alone pery and the finitetic institutions of feudalism, it was necestime when mankind were breaking the scentar chains of powas necessary that the Lord should command it. At the upon the treacherous shoals of disorder and libertinage a preserve the ship, launched into the open sea, from triang grandeur and their necessity, they had their danger at o To movements of humanity Meverthele s, if they had their cert un minds, are titiles in comparison with these mighty and even the britles of armies, which are more pleasing to decided said plainly, that the only means of saving Geneva was to set up one supreme magistrate. Did not the Romans create dictators in the hour of extreme peril? All these councils of Twenty-five, of Sixty, of Two Hundred, and, above all, the General Council of the people were (the Episcopals thought) both useless and pernicious. The administration ought to be placed in the hands of one man, and be given preferably to one of the lords of Friburg. The fervent catholicism of that canton and its resentment at Wernli's death guaranteed the fidelity with which the mission would be fulfilled. It does not appear that anything was decided about the selection; but the bishop made up his mind to attempt a bold stroke of policy. Having come to an understanding with the Duke of Savoy,* he signed at Arbois the instruments which set up in Geneva a Lieutenant of the prince in temporal matters with full powers of punishing criminals. The document was immediately forwarded to Portier, the episcopal secretary, the bishop's confidential man, who was to determine, in accordance with the heads of the party, the favorable moment and the best means of carrying it into execution. On his side the duke did not keep them waiting for assistance. Portier received blank warrants, sealed with the ducal arms, with authority to use them as he pleased, so as to bring the matter to a happy issue. The plot was skilfully devised. The court of Turin, the lords of Friburg, and the mamelukes were all to assist the bishop; but, according to the received formula, God was there and the republic of Berne.' †

Indeed, it seemed at first that the instrument was destined to remain mere waste paper. The episcopal plot existed; the deed had been signed by the prince-bishop on the 12th of January, but on the first of February it was still a dead letter. Portier, aware of the spirit with which the citizens were animated, feared to make the episcopal ordinance known, either to magistrates or people. Privately, however, herence Pennet the Juler drew his sword, sprung at Porral, blien d'Adda, Their blood boiled at the sight of the two niet ino huguenois, Nicholas Porral, the notary, and Siewhich the a hite marble portal of the cathedral open, the they came in front of the steps, and the large platform on these faurties entered the court of St. Pierres. Just us mas one of the most meritorious works to am heavenbeen sincere, but unhappily of opinion that to stab a herene Just quoted These formutes - ne believe them to have stuke and kill the others, says the document which we have or Encoderd, corled the front the palace, proposed to under positive orders emanating from the bi hop, these men by the Bernese, perhaps also (as some baro beheved) acting bity, the Dominican, contridicted by Parel and proceeded thoy had intherto kept by them, and mainted at secing Furth of the punce and the pope, excited by the ordinance which after dunce. Infirmed by the desire of saving the authori brother Claude, Jacques Desel, and several others. It was episcopal party met at the palace. Pennet, the Jailer, his On Tue day, 3d February, the most excitable of the blood, eays a document uritten a few days after the affair. di tiely 'They undertook, with several others, to spill much two Pennets, the seeder of the party, resolved to act mime-Some not peaded episcopyle, and particularly the mg the nomination of a licutenant invested with ab olute beace would be, even if it failed, the best means of justifyyoke, and, finally, that a root which di furbed the public only nould constrain the Genevese to bend their necks to the should have recourse to more vigorous mealures, that force thought that logical di cuesions only did harm that they p's partisans at Genera, as nell as at Aibois and Lurin, 'ennet, one of whom was the episcopal jailer The bi hting it into execution, among them were two brothers named he discussed with some of his confidants the means of put-

^{*} MSC. de Roset, liv. iii. ch. xxi — MSC. de Gautier. † Registre du Conseil des 8 et 10 Février, 1534.

nese de Gauth et - Legustro du Co se L I broment, Gestes de Genère p. 945 - Chros. mac de Rosel. - Ilius # Lettres certo nes 1535.

struck him; and, seeing him fall, impudently continued his way, with his band, by the Rue du Perron to the Molard, the rallying ground of all rioters. D'Adda, and some other huguenots who had come up, surrounded the wounded Porral, lifted him up, and, wishing to stop the commencing riot as soon as possible, carried him to the hotel-de-ville, and laid him, all pale and bleeding, before the syndics and the council.

The magistrates were moved at the sight as of old - if we may compare the great things of antiquity with the little things that inaugurated modern times - as of old the corpse of Cæsar, gashed with wounds and carried through the Forum, excited the indignation and cries of the startled people. D'Adda informed the syndics of Pennet's violent attack, and called for the punishment of the assassin. But he had scarcely ceased speaking when a great noise was heard from without: the court-yard of the hotel-de-ville was filled with agitated citizens; tumultuous shouts were raised the gates of the hall were dashed open and 'incontinent (says the Register) many people rushed in furiously crying out: Justice! justice!' An estimable man, a worthy tradesman and zealous huguenot, Nicholas Berger by name, who lived in the Rue du Perron, happened to be in his shop just as the band, which had wounded Porral, was passing by. Attracted by the noise, he had probably moved towards the door: Claude Pennet observing him, stopped, and, as if jealous of his brother's exploit, sprung at the unarmed citizen, and with one blow of his dagger, laid him dead at his feet. 'All good men,' added the citizens, 'are filled with horror, and demand that the criminal be punished according to law.'

This event was not without importance. It was a new act in that obstinate struggle which, at the beginning of the sixteenth century, took place in a permanent manner in a little city on the shore of the Leman lake, and was repeated in other shapes in other countries. Combatants do not cross a frontier without marking their path by their blood. Those who were then fighting the last battles of what may be called the Togggeb ili nove - lla , bas utimi their end, all -- even il sense by the principles of a function bigotry, so that all The great evil consisted in the corruption of their moral mistrken but their error did not he essentially in that energenc intervention of the episcopal party. They were that excred cause could only be upheld, they thought, by the the alliance between Switzerland and the Reform thon, and In their eyes, both religion and order were compromi ed by there were some the armed the good of their country Undoubtedly many were animated by party spirit, but where they were not all devoid of generous sentiments. Geneva, where they were perhaps more violent than el ethe e insolent champions of Rome and feudali in Even at partial listory shrunks from tracing too hidcous a picture of tron age, beheved they nere serving the course of ju tice Im-

Judob n 101 costsul znibnans de strong oth oldiffi murb all the citizen of a first strong of the citizen of the strong of the citizen of the strong them of the citizen was compared and the citizen of t

The councel were actionabled at this mows of Bregger's death that it includes a tere oppo ed to such erranes, but that of Billie line four syndres were evilouses. Du Crest, Crude Billie, and Mallies mere evilouses. Du Crest, Crude duri ful mid Mallie non, and the same proportion as the syndres. Besides a Besides and proved besides are discontinued as the many the council the times adors of them of the middle were discontinued to many when the ambie adors of Berne deminded to spent have a word accounted the such a such a such as the council. The public lords, who a unificant desired to man up to the order of they need a man and a condiminated such as the council. The public lords, who are unifically the lords of an interest when the council are the lords of the lords of an interest when the council are the lords of the lords o CHAP. V.

were running to arms. It is to be feared that there will be a great butchery (tuerie); we conjure you to look to it, and offer our services to appease the disturbance.' The premier syndic prayed them to do so; and, when the Bernese had left, the council continued its deliberations.

Meanwhile, the principle hugnenots had met in consulta-Two of their friends had just fallen beneath the blows of their adversaries: one of them was dead; their party had taken up arms; Portier and the Pennets had fled in alarm; the catholic faction was discouraged. In this state of things it would have been easy for them to fall upon their adversaries and gain a decisive victory; but sentiments of order and legality prevailed among them. They had no desire to infringe the law but to appeal to it; there were judges in Geneva. Blood must be avenged, not by violence but by justice. 'No disorder,' said the hugnenot chiefs, 'no revenge, no attack, no fighting! . . . but let us help the magistrates that they may be able to do their duty.' Five hundred armed citizens, the most valiant men in Geneva, arrived in good order and drew up in front of the hotel-de-ville, while their chiefs - Maisonneuve, Salomon, Perrin, and Aimé Levet - went into the council-room. 'Honored lords,' they said, 'we have assembled for no other reason than to preserve order. We fear lest the priests have prepared a fourth or fifth émeute; and hence we are here in a body to avoid their fury and lend assistance to the syndics. We pray that the murderers and those who counselled the riot may be punished.'* There was not a moment's hesitation: all, catholics and protestants alike, desired the guilty to be punished, and search was made for them.

It was thought that they were hiding in the bishop's palace: it was probable, indeed, that secretary Portier, who lived there, had gone thither and given a refuge to his accomplices, as being the safest place in all Geneva. 'We will go and take them there,' said Syndie Du Crest, a cath-

^{*} Registre du Conseil du 3 Février, 1534. — MSC. de Roset, Chron. liv. iii., ch. xix. — MSC. de Gautier.

selves in the vestibule to wait for the morning, but no one to beep guard during the right. The men stationed thema few of their officers in the episcopal mansion, with orders syndics, wishing to prevent new intrigues, resolved to leave anguish doubled as to the fate of her husband vigor with which the assassins nere bunted after, felt but Perronnette alone, the episcopal secretary's wife, sceing the culprits were found. Many beheved they had escaped, bams they took, says the 'Council Register,' none of the of the magnetrates and their sergeants, but for all the chamber or a cellar or a garret escaped the inquisitive eyes doors, and a street search began immediately. Not a cuttance into the palace, the bishop's servants opened the ing sight of the chief magnetrates of the city, demanding an the hotel-de ville followed by their officers At the impoone but loyal man. The other syndies to e, and all quitted in the city how they were there.

These brave men were talking of what was going on in Genew, when a hills before eight o'clock at might (it had been dark for some time, as it was the beginning of February), a low, smothered voice was breat in the street, as it rurity), a low, smothered voice was breat in the street, as it leaved a rigan and pronounced several times in a distinct manier the name of the portrest section. The concern and is a service in the advantage thry could derive from the unexpected. If was a priest sofily calling to the certain, says the Council Register? The huguenois, understanding sextanly the advantage thry could derive from this unexpected. It was a priest sofily calling to the certain, says the commander derived man who was with them that the council of the counci committee, desired a young man who was with them that a noman's voice and answer. Disguising bis to a how voice, desired a you want? The price I have grade in the speaker, and Claudo Pennet. It is probable they we retrain to the open they we need them to hide in some eafer place, and perhaps orly by a secret gate. The young man, again a furnit, voice, and voice and perhaps and them to hide in some eafer place, and perhaps a furnit, and it is probable they we furnity with a furnity voice, and they we have a furnity of the perhaps and they were a furnity of the perhaps and they were a furnity of the perhaps and they were a furnity of the perhaps and a furnity of the perhaps and they were a furnity of the perhaps hidden,' answered the priest. It was just what the guard wanted to know. One of them got up, opened the gate, and the priest, seeing an armed man instead of a woman, fled in affright. The guard, without stopping to pursue him, ran o the hotel-de-ville, where the council was sitting en pernanence, and told the whole story to the syndies. The nurderers whom they were looking for were hidden in the athedral. The magistrates determined to go there immenately.

It was no slight task to seek the assassins in the vast sathearat, all filled with chapels, altars, and other places where men could hide. The syndics entered between eight and time o'clock at night with a certain number of officers carrying numbeaux. The doors were shut immediately, so that no one could get out, and a dead silence prevailed in the nave. Under the flickering light of the torches, this pile, one of the timest monuments of the twelfth century, displayed all its august majesty. But that splendor of byzantine and gouine architecture, those graceful proportions, that admirable unity so well calculated to produce a deep impression of grandear and harmony, did not strike My Lords of Geneva, who were thinking of other matters. Du Crest and his colleagues were not occupied with architectural decorations and noly images. . . They were hunting for murderers.

The search began: the magistrates and their officers went over the chapels of the Holy Cross, the Virgin, St. Martin, St. Maurice, St. Anthony, and nine others in the interior; they examined carefully the eighteen altars, so richly adorned with all that the catholic worship requires. The sergeants took their flambeaux into every corner, they lifted up the carpets, they stooped to search for the culprits. The apse, the transept, the sanctuary, they searched them all; they examined the vestry, the scals, the aisles, the galleries, the stairs — they found nothing. They next went into the chapel of the Maccabees, adjoining the carhedral, and which the cardinal-bishop, Jean de Brogny, near built a century a the prison of the hosel-de-tille The officers of the State stated them and shut them up earlies themselves they were more dead than abbetwo male fretory, although armed to the teeth, did not think axes and da, bers, and covered with costs of mail' the down, armed 'ays the Register, with swords from pikes, vorered the crafty Portier and the violent Pennet, crouching corner He drew near, followed by his friends, and distorch and eaw arms glittering and eyes sparking in one reached the top of the toner, curcludy put fornard his Council, who marched at the head of the band, having cenced through the unding statemes. The officer of the circular prelies. The steps of this numerous party reetecple with its four gothic windows surmounted by semirecended slowly and steadily, and approached the brest suffer them. The men who executed the syndies orders the passage and even to kill some of those who were looknarrow, it would have been easy for the opiecopals to close band of their friends well armed. The stairs being very might perhaps and not only Portier and the Pennel, but a of the priest nas true, the criminals must be there, and they climbed the numerous steps, they thought that, if the evidence the south toner, one hundred and filly feet bigh As they and it ir suite re olved to exumine them, beginning with might be hidden in one of the three towers. The syndica them that possibly the murderers they were looking after gunning to lose all hope, when the idea occurred to one of three hours and the magistrates and their officers were becomplices could be found. The search had lasted nearly life, but neither Portier, nor Pennel, nor any of their acthis manner to recall the humble recollections of his early man keeping swine under an oak, the cardinal destring in passed by those tables abere might still be seen a joung ings, and mouldings entrehed with beads of gold. They before, adorning it with magnificent eartings, gorgeous print-

* Reg, stra du Conse i du 3 bevrner 1531 Spon i p. 516 Muchal, tit

J#*

While these things were going on at St Pierre's, the guard which the syndies had left at the palace, encouraged by the success of their stratagem, had resolved to take advantage of the opportunity to get at the secrets of the house; and, assuming a simple, good-natured air, they entered into conversation with the servants, questioning them so skilfully that they soon knew all they wanted. . The bishop's secretary, alone and without support, is too weak,' they said, 'to withstand the will of the council and people.' 'But he is not so alone as you think,' answered one; 'he has with him my lord the bishop, his highness the Duke of Savoy;' and then he continued proudly, 'he has even received letters from them!' The independent citizens, affecting incredulity, exclaimed! 'What! Portier receive secret messages from such great personages!' . . . One of the episcopals, piqued by the disdainful sneer, declared aloud, 'that the letters were in existence, in buffeto (says the Council Register, in its classic Latin), in the secretary's buffet.' At these words the sly huguenots started up suddenly, and, hurrying in great glee to Portier's room, broke open the cupboard, took out the papers lying there, and carried them to the syndies. This discovery was still more important than the other.

The magistrates hastened to open the packet, and found a bundle of papers, all having reference to the plot which the bishop had contrived for the subjugation of Geneva. They examined the contents and were alarmed. 'Here is an act signed by the bishop on the 12th of January last,—only twenty days ago,—appointing a governor for the temporalities, with power to punish rebels. The prince, of his mere caprice, establishes an unconstitutional agent, who is to have no other law than his own will. Here are blank warrants sealed with the arms of the Dukes of Savoy. It is a downight conspiracy, a crime of high-treason.' The date of the act made it sufficiently clear that Pierre de la Baume was the instigator of the troubles which had been on the point of throwing the city into confusion. It we have the instigator of the confusion.

that Portier, the recognized agent of this revolutionary intrigue, should be tried before the syndies; and a pubbe proceeding, Jean Lambert, a sound juguenot, was elected to proceedings.

However, before commeneng this trial, that of Pennet, less complexited than the other, was to be concluded. The case was clear, provided for by the law, and not pardomble. Claude Pennet stood forward boldly, like a man enduring Claude Pennet stood forward boldly, like a man enduring prescention for the Christian religion. He was consistent of like and desired and desi tridom, nothing doubling; for the kingdom of heaven is and 'Sire Claude, go cheerfully and rejoice in Jour marfate of this precious son of the Church, hiesed hun, and reverend father, moved to tears by the purly and wretched to the Dominican, and I entreat your hely presters. The demned to the sentiald for the love of Jesus Christ, he sud good catbolic made his confession. . . . I am con-St Clare † Pennet wished to die prously, 'therefore this other they could not forbear from weeping, says the nun of conducted to the murderer's cell, and when they erw each of Bome. The monk of the order of the Inquisition "us was detained in prison for having m-ulted the adversaries net. Pennet asked to see Futbity, the Dominican, who beasted of the murder as an honorable, boly, and herese party. In them passion took the place of reason, and they was the same with all his friends, zealots of the Roman done; fanaticism stifled the voice of con-cience in him. It in Pennet's manner. He did not repent the deed be had pronounced the sentence of death. This made no change Perron, and Syndic du Crest, n catholic but a wise man, of having murdered Nicholas Berger in his shop at the open and the angels are wanting for you. †

'The murder of which Penner was guilty was, in the Dominical's oyes, the north of a sunt. Diose of the equeco
* Region and Occasional dea Set & Ferner, 1821. Bucket, iii p. 217 Men

* Region and Occasional dea Set & Ferner, 1821. Bucket, iii p. 217 Men

* Regional

de beniter ; Quand so virant | um | antire, no as purent tenir de pleurer ! ... La Sour Lande, Lecone, de believenes.

t 1911 bb er-e3

pals thought the same; and it was feared that their party, which had the populace with them, would oppose the execution of the sentence. De la Maisonneuve, determining to support the law by force, collected a certain number of armed men in his house.* But their intervention was not necessary. Nothing disturbed the course of justice, and the executioner cut off the murderer's head, and hung his body on a gibbet. Before long, the populace was in commotion. 'Have you heard the news?' people said. 'Miraeles are worked at the place where Pennet's body hangs. His face is as ruddy and his lips as fresh as if he was alive, and a white dove is continually hovering over his head.' The devout made pilgrimages to the place of execution.

The other Pennet, the jailer who had wounded Porral, and who, says Sister Jeanne, 'was not less ardent than his brother in upholding the holy catholic religion,' was all this time lying hid in the house of a poor beggar-woman, where the nuns of St. Claire, who alone were in the secret, stealthily carried him food. The execution of his brother alarmed him; so one night, when it froze hard, he left his hiding-place barefoot, and arrived stealthily at the convent of St. Claire, where the nuns provided him with a disguise, in which he escaped to Savoy.

The third delinquent, — the State eriminal, Portier, — remained. The matter appeared so serious to the procurator-general that he desired it should be communicated to the people. The Council General having met on the 8th February, Lambert ordered the letters found at the palace, as well as the duke's blank warrants, to be read to the assembly. 'What! a governor of Geneva invested with the temporalities of the sovereign power, with authority to punish eitizens who maintain their political and religious rights; the constitution of the State trampled under foot by the prince-bishop; and the Duke of Savoy, that eternal enemy of Genevan independence, forcibly aiding this usurpation and violence!' All this constituted a guilty plot, even in the

^{*} MS. du Procès inquisitionnel de Lyon, p. 32.

enter the city * half-open door and I crantice the retornous Reformation to etruck the decisive blow, that threw wide open the bitherto puguenot milotity it was the elescopit con luncy that and J Durillard The executive council thus became a the Swies alliance, Ann de Chapeautouge, Anné Curice, who, in 1526, had fled to Berne, and had brought back the State They were Michael Sept, one of the Impurious bengence nece eiged by the people to the fix t to then in only one who belonged to this extegory, four friends of mide-While, among the syndies retiring from office, there was with Suitzerland and to the cause of the Reformation but men known by their attachment to the umon of Gener i and in managed and of series of her generalized layonergy out that had departed. The Generose determined to bre it with they seemed to hear the funeral knell of nn merent dynasty were shocked, a sullen silence detrayed their indignation tator were read in the assembly of the people, the currens the sealed letters of the bishop which gree Genera a diepose of oppression, and God shittered that power When princes He had desired to employ his power for the purpunishment, which, by the will of God, falls upon unjust have fallen. But Pierro de la Brumo nas to receito the even had he been in Genera, not a hour of his head would erminal. His quality of prince corered his person, so that, out the orders they had received, the bishop was the real Let Portier and his sgents had merely begun to carry the city, it was not possible to save the con copal secretary numally that there was a consputer grain the liberties of the procurator general and the luguenots repre ented con to stace him, and even offered luge sums of money Pennets had been, for the Roman-catholics ma le every effort ont off to trist nait rough slover than that of T england and general demanded that Porticr should be brought before and the voice of justice nere in harmony. The procurator exes of right minded catholics. The roice of the people

[&]quot; Registre du Conse I des 8 et 10 I err er, Lods.

CHAPTER VI.

A FINAL EFFORT OF ROMAN CATHOLICISM.

(FEBRUARY 10 TO MARCH 1, 1534.)

Unequivocal tokens soon made known the change that had taken place. Every one knew that the critical moment had arrived; but that it should be salutary, it was necessary to enlighten the people and set distinctly before them the end which it was proposed to attain. In all that concerns religious questions, the first point is to understand them thoroughly; vagueness always does injury to true religion. The magistrates determined to make clear the points on which the discussion turned, and accordingly the new syndies ordered Furbity to appear before the Council. This body. which had called to their aid the deputies of Berne and the three reformers, invited the monk to prove by the Holy Scriptures, as he had promised, the doctrines he advanced. 'In the first place,' they said, 'you have accused those who eat meat, which God hath created to be received,* of being worse than Turks.' - 'Sirs.' answered the monk. 'I confess that our Lord did not make the prohibition of which I spoke; I will, therefore, prove my statement by the decrees of St. Thomas.'- 'Ho! ho!' said Farel, 'you pretended to prove everything by the Word of God; you even consented, in the opposite case, to be burnt at the stake, and now . you give up the Scriptures!'

They did not confine themselves to this question; the lords of Berne proved by fourteen witnesses the other errors preached by Furbity; for instance: that God will punish those who read the Scriptures in the vulgar tongue, and that Christ had given the papacy to St. Peter. They proved, also, the reality of the abuse uttered by the Dominican against the relating of the abuse accept, however, that a German (a Surza German) are among the accentioners of our Lord. It appeared there some wag had invented the story to relate the monk. The Bernee deel red that, as the monk was, according to his own confex ma, only 's present the decrees of St. Thomas's and a story-tailer, justice ought to decrees of St. Thomas's and a story-tailer, justice ought to have a lis course.

The Dominican began to be struct, and officed to apologents. The Dominican depend and the existence of the premier z-adic, and you will discreared quick Genera and never return under pain of wall discreared quick Genera and never return under pain of Line Dominican desired nothing better thin to per again, The Dominican desired nothing better thin to per paints.

· Leures certaines Le. Beginter da Conveil des 11, 12, 13, 15 herr et became could ed, t many of the buguenois left their places mone rambled noterth merer from the question, he inted, on t unurcione i oices maniegrafely seconded the remark. But the Sir Doctor, you have nothing to do here but to retruct, and thing quite different. One of the Berne cealed to him them it over, to wander from it, and invilly to say some retractation which the syndres had given him, he begin to prised, but it was much norse, when, well id of reading the and surohed the Virgin. . . The Bernese looked surhim-elf, made the sign of the cio , said the die dorte, without offending the other He tried, however, to recover one flaure or old our illowed the bar - encounted olders it self between two powers-the horrable Bernese and the his confusion and embarrassment mere seed. Ho san lumand, easing his eyes on the croud which tilled the church, On reaching the foot of the pulpit, he nent mus it bestly, ly, and his mind was distracted with contending emotionloth of February. He was much sgreated, wilked burrieds by his guard, was led quicily to St. Pierre's on Sunday, the In consequence of this decreton, the Dominions attended

Contest du 18 février, p. 57.

† * Pagaus et raculants senterine autofacere meglanis." — Beg sire la

a great agitation pervaded the church, and the patience of the congregation was becoming exhausted. 'You are making fools of us,' they cried out to the monk. 'Do not stuff our ears with your usual nonsense. Come, a good peccavi!'* But there was no retractation. A great uproar then arose; some violent men went up into the pulpit, seized the disciple of St. Dominic, and dragged him down roughly.† 'They made the chair fall after him,' says Sister Jeanne, 'and he was nearly left dead on the spot' (the good sister often colors too highly). The catholics quitted the church in alarm, and the doctor of the Sorbonne, having broken his promise, was led back to prison.‡

The Bernese ambassadors next appeared before the Council, and asked permission for the Gospel to be publicly preached in one of the churches. The syndics replied that it was just what they wanted, and that they would require the Lent preacher to conform his sermons to the Gospel.

The fanatical Dominican, empowered to deliver the Advent lectures, having compromised catholicism, and the council having declared against every preacher who should not preach according to God's Word, the Genevan clergy determined to make a last effort. They said they must choose a monk of another sort for the Lent course, and consequently turned to the Franciscans, who had often dreamt of a transformation of religious society. There were great differences between these two mendicant orders: the Dominicans were rich, the Franciscans poor; the Dominicans aimed at dominion, the Franciscans at humility; the Dominicans were fossilized in their doctrines and customs, the Franciscans were flexible and had a taste for innovations. They knew how to catch the multitude by their enthusiasm and flagellations, by their insinuating manners and miraculous visions. It is a man of this sort, said the day, the 14th of February next morning (it n as the Sunday and preach at Genera during Lent He arrived on Saturbery, renowned for his eloquence and wit, was invited to come Father Courielier, superior of the Franciscans of Chamsmoll losmir the clergy hoped to lead Genera meensibly back mio the be eaptivated by the flattenes of the other In this manner If Geneva had resisted the roughness of the one, it would placet of the eatbolics, that we want after the Dominican Go pel of St Lube, and to eclebrate mass. The press rethe salutation of the nugel to M ir, which is recorded in the lowed to make the sign of the ero, a in the pulpit, to repe it these four points nere struck off the list, but he was all the huguenois objected, and enung sys fo nonno cles, Purgalory was mother, Proyer for the dead, Incoread Incocution of the Virgin Mary n.as one of the artithe pricet into a court of doctrine, ordered the paper to be of in great part Lutherm finding them these converted by durils 'Strike out u hat you do not approve of' I he Counerro to preach, " adding, as if he was before the rollege of earhe way he presented anno articles, saying 'This is what I de-Enthbornmosor work works of gurnest their hand, bothers od so,' replied the monh, who had been well tutorid, 'you will nothing but the pure Go pel of God .-- I undertube to do episcopal, said to him. Reverend father, you must preach The premier syndic, resummer a duty that was comewhat preceding Shrote Tue dy) he appeared before the Council manage to mye the pope and Luther gree, had gone rights them), I de trous of hearing how the monk no. II - with many of their accompleces (is Inflier Courteller man Brudichon de la M n onneure mid the reformer barel the papacy The two cluefs of the Retornation -the laypulpit and fabored shilfully to ret un Genera in the orbit of On Ash Wednesdiy the reserved appearer went into the turned to his convent with the revised irrigles.

[‡] Registre du Conseil des 15, 16, 20 Février. Froment, Gestes de Genève, p. 88. La Sœur Jeanne, Levain du Calvinisme, p. 78.

^{* &#}x27;Nugis solitus plebis aures suspendere satageret.' — Geneva restituta, pp. 6-9.

^{† &#}x27;Impostor suggestu deturbatus.' — Geneva restituta, pp. 6-9.

¹²⁵ d no (1 of famous impais soon I at 616 f # I egistre du Conseil des 15 et 16 l'ére et 1.31.

to the Franciscan church at Rive (Courtelier had not been admitted to the honor of the cathedral). The monk began by repeating in a sonorous voice the invocation to the Virgin: Ave Maria..., at which Farel and the huguenots called out so that all could hear them: 'It is a foolish thing to salute the Virgin Mary!'—'I do it by permission of the Council,' answered the monk ingennously, and all the catholics in the congregation, desiring to support their champion, began to cry out: Ave Maria, gratia plena! There was such a lond and universal murmur, that Farel, Maisonneuve, and their friends were obliged to hold their tongues.*

Courtelier continued, endeavoring to speak at once according to the pope and the Gospel. One sentence contradicted another; what was white one moment was black the next; his sermon was a muddle of ideas without issue, a strain of music without harmony. Farel and his friends soon understood the manœuvre. 'He is using a cloak to entrap us,' they said, 'and will take care not to show his teeth at starting. He gives us drink... as they did at Babylon, poison in a golden chalice.' Disgusted with such trimming, Farel stood up and said: 'You cannot teach the truth, for you do not know it.' The poor friar stopped short: resuming his courage by degrees and wishing to please the friends of the Gospel, he began to inveigh against both pricsts and popes. It was now the turn of the eatholies; and the Franciscan, noticing their anger and desiring to regain their favor, began once more to vituperate the reformers. Without doctrine, without opinions, he fluctuated between Rome and Wittemberg, and instead of satisfying everybody, he exasperated both parties. 'We cannot serve God and the devil.' said Froment with disgust.

The reverend superior now changed his tactics, knowing, as all good Franciscans did, that flies are to be eaught with honey, and began to praise the Genevans in extravagant language: 'Ladies and gentlemen,' he said from the pulpit,

^{*} MS. du Proces inquisitionnel de Lyon, pp. 331-332.

842

Acty well what he ought to think of the boliness of the inexhaustible in extravagant compliments, although he knew rout people . . . Your name declares it. The monk was derota?. . . a good, meresful, boly, illustrous, and deeay, gens bond, gens benigna, gens sancia, gens præclara, gens noble city. Is it not called Geneva, Gebenna, that is to make Jourselves worthy of the great name borne by your . dies and gentlemen, always preserve your glorious title, and are of good repute . . . and worthy people. . . Lato hell Not you are a noble and mighty city . . . you your fathers nere idolaters, and that you are being led away beoble (Eurel and his two friends) who teach you that you and peware how you suffer yourselves to be seduced by the entered a large hall, which had been contined by remount said the Sar oyards; and, following some huguenots, they Bandachon's house? . . . Let us go and see what it is like, evid one of them, that there is going to be a baptism at catholics and Lutherans, had assembled 'Have you heard,' were in the Molard, where also a number of Generany both Bornand, and Heary Advresllon of the parish of Thonon, Savoy ards, Claude Theveron of the mountains of the Grand-On the 22d of February, the first Sunday in Lent, two curiosity even among the strangers who were in General a sign of regeneration. The news spread, and excited great e-tablish bapta-m in conformity with the Go-pel institution, as n hich Rome had everburdened public wership, desired to re-Reform. Farel, setting aside the manifold ceremonies with tlemen or ladies,' † and mored with firm steps in the path of his francia, said . We do not desire to please either gennot succeed. On the contrary, the huguenote, provoled by This final effort of Roman-catholicism in Genera did Genevese, and puricularly of the monks and priests.

† Nous no roulons plant, nous, m a Monsteur ni a Madame."-Froment, * The word Gedering occurs frequently in uncient documents the two strangers were able to find room, but the later arrithe partitions. ‡ Some of the seats were already occupied. vals were compelled to stand near the door. 'There must be three hundred and more present,' said Advreillon to his friend. On a raised chair sat a young man with mild countenance and sharp eyes: they were told it was Viret of Orbe; right and left of him were Farel and Froment. A gentleman of the city of good appearance, who seemed to be between forty and fifty years old, showed the people to their seats and watched to see that everything was conducted with propriety. That is Baudichon de la Maisonneuve,' the Savoyards were informed, 'the master of the house, and the greatest Lutheran in Geneva.'*

The service then began. Viret's gentle eloquenee charmed his hearers; the two strangers, however, would gladly have seen themselves outside of the assembly into which they had impudently erept; but all the passages were blocked up: 'We cannot get out,' said Advreillon, 'because of the great erowd of people;' so they made up their minds to stay till the end. As soon as the sermon was over, the two Savoyards were about to leave, when De la Maisonneuve said aloud: 'Let no one move, a baptism is going to be eelebrated here.' The baptism took place, and Viret added: 'It was with pure, fair water that John baptized Jesus Christ; to baptize with oil, salt, and spittle as the hypocrites do, is wrong.' The two strangers, offended by such language, got away as fast as they could.

As many persons had been unable to take part in the service, the huguenots, whose patience was exhausted, resolved to be no longer satisfied with narrow halls, which did not permit all who loved the Word of God to hear it. 'Jesus Christ commands the Gospel to be preached in all the world,' said Farel, 'it must therefore be preached in Geneva;' whereupon he asked for a church. The Bernese ambassadors undertook to present the petition. 'Most honored lords,' they said to the Council, 'when we and our ministers pass along the streets, people shout after us: "Holla! heretics, you dare not appear in public, you preach your heresies

^{*} MS. du Procès inquisitionnel de Lyon, pp. 233, 234.

Summa de pot state ecchensina, Qu zlve art. 3 t, hebe etce per est omminm tellmenm biere t - bub leinn puns.

titualibus sed ten poral bus - De I bracia et les e i b i cap xin 1 Aurischtenten fabet unte eraden in foto mundo fapa ne lut i m tp ?

* MS du Procesingue i ennel de I von pp 250 236 of the middle ages, derived them from the Holy Scriptures, seeking his ideas about Rome in the writings of the monks bobe is in the place of Godo, t But Firel in tend of tis spiritualities ? † Had not another mont laught that 'the eal embracing the whole world, its temporablies as well as himself, declared that the jurisdiction of the pope is univer and power. Had not Altarus Pelague, a Tranci can like authority of the pope, exioling his bolines s infulibility stead of making the least concession, took refuge behind the that the Gospel truth could not be preached, the mont, m cerved them in his cell, and the reformer haring complyined rel proceeded to the kurner can convent. Courteller reintrepid Maisonneuve and the wise councillor Bultharn, Eunot ser perhaps it was puily both Accompanied by the God, did he desire to tell the cordeler his mind? We can was a power of Anticher t nluch rest ted the kingdom of churches, or else, convinced, like Lather, that the papacy ing, that the evangeliest doctrine ought to be preached in the Did he wish to convince Courtelier, at times so recommodittel resolved to have an interview with the father- uperior The refusal of the syndics annoyed the evangeheals, Fa-no£ ne dare not. We cannot resist you are etrong doctrines your own accord some edifice in which you can preach your be hop and his vients 'Still, they added, if you take of pulpit to a Lutheran preacher, that it belonged to the princenese, but said it was not in their jurisdiction to as ign a they were greved at the ignominies herped upon the Berbe satisfied. The syndies, greatly embrarased, declared will go to the notship he prefers, and thus everybody will one will be constrained to hear our preacher, every man with this, and now no come to all you for a church No in poles and corners like pigetie. * We have long put up

Summe de potestate cochenceted, Que xlei urt. 3

preporting pie ricens , Still, they added, if you take of pulpit to a Lutherin preacher, that it belonged to the princenese, but ead it was not in their jurisdiction to as ign a they were greved at the synomiaise beaped upon the Berbe satisfied. The syndic, greatly cuiburissed, declared will go to the noiship he prefers, and thus every body will one will be constrained to hear our preacher, every man with this and now we come to all you for a church th holes and corners like pigsties  We have long put up

God, did he desire to tell the cordeher his mind? We can-To mulgard oils but seen should resulted the kingdom of charches, or else, convenced, the Luther, that the pepart ad in badacay od ot ingue eurine benegarve edi ted to be preached in the Did he wish to convince Courtelier, at times so recommodatrel resolved to have an unterview with the father- upersor The refusal of the syndics annoyed the evangeheals, I'r-, ton ease our . DOG We cannot resist Ruons are now doctrines . your own accord some edifice in which you can preach your

of the middle ages, derived them from the Holy Scriptures, secking his ideas about Rome in the writings of the monks bobe is in the place of God?; But Earl, in tend of tes spiritadities? † Had not another mond i ught that 'the en lian er saudraoquest est denon slodn aut guerrdme, dehimself, declared that the jura-diction of the pope is univerand power. Had not Aharus Peligus, a Frincican like inthoraty of the pope, extolling ins holmess's infilibility stead of making the least concession, took refuer behind the that the Gospel truth could not be presched, the mont, in cerved them in his cell, and the reformer h tring complimed rel proceeded to the Franci can convent. Conficher 16intrepid Maisonneure and the wise councillor Bilibaert, Firnot say perhaps it was putly both Accompanied by the

4 de ut mni au ade i of unu coto un mojentatiun toge i moutetpetine, $ oss est qq norlab lannottelupni edon lub 218 *

1 . I apa s ice Det, est omnimm regmorms proeser - Aub. Irim II um thundibus sed temporal bus ' -- De glomte ceeles at bb i cap x n

BOOK AIR

THE REPORTATION IN ELROPP

have caused an indescribable trouble in my soul.* Parel had formerly swallowed without tasting ‡ The as embly Some began to consider and to relish the grace which they nt work in his own through the ministry of the reformer brely feeling of love for Christ God, as Calvin says, nas a yana an deliced and the the excited in many a prophets and apostles, says one of his biographers, he enbegan to speak borrowing his fire from the writings of the

Among the Franciscans who listened to Firel was Jacques finge any be ardor of the divine spirit n rs charmed and enraptured, the souls of many were in

Stud became a new Paul § This first preaching of Fartls was to him as the road to Doma-cus - that there this new and new ears. It has been ead that the convent at Rive n as more attentive than Jacques God give him new eyes them But on this occa ion no one and in bull maili Then, without another word, he rudely turned his brek on nen to exlute the Virgin and make the sign of the cross." spread of a figure of the second of the formation of the fore, meeting Tarel and Viret, he told them with a scowi spoken violently against the reformers, and a few days be been a sincere worshipper of the Virgin He had often He was lively, intelligent, learned, and definit, and had long Bernard, belonging to one of the best fraultes in Genera.

their followers spread the frames through the city. The lounds, they indulged in terrible bursts of presion, and The wrath of the men deroted to the paper, knew no But this light, which had enlightened some, blinded others payarita munitaried courgeously the truths he had once so much contributed at least to Bernard's conversion, and ere long he

* Sane me, tam rebementer conturbarunt tun illa fulgura '- Calvi) by Industrial our for the next day The Ilundred

* 191f og al enca oblava Savourer la gruce

1 Archinard Adifices rel gieux de l'an unne Gentre, p. 103

1 Angillon, Vie de Farel

Some began to consider and to reliah the grace which they it work in his oun through the mini try of the reformer hvely feeling of love for Christ God, 2s Calvin ears, n 2s r yarm m bettered the beart † He excited in many r prophets and spostles, eays one of his biographers, he enbeggan to speak borrowing his fire from the withings of the have caused an indescribable trouble in my soul'. Farel

Among the Franciscans who hetened to Farel u as Incques tirigs ourtib edt to tobus oft yd bemit were charmed and enraptmed, the souls of many were in had formerly surflowed without tasting ‡ The assembly maintained contrigeously the truths he had once so much contributed at least to Bernard a conversion, and ere long he Suil became a new Paul & This first prenching of Larcis was to him as the read to Dimascus - that there this new and new cars. It has been and that the convent at Rive nas more attentive than Jacques God grye bim new eyes them. But on this ocea ion no one in the grand auditory Then, without another word, he rudely turned his back on men to salute the Virgin and male the agn of the cross? In tunce pret there were schemence, coough who forbade fore, meeting T'u el and Viret, he told them with a scowl spoken violently against the reformers, and a few days be been a smeere worshipper of the Virgin. He had often He was hiely, mielbgent, learned, and defiant, and had long Bernard, belonging to one of the best finities in Genera.

briault oul sail confingration broke out the next day their followers spread the flunes through the city. The bounds, they indulged in terrible bursts of presion, and The wrath of the men deroted to the papacy knew no But this light, which had enlightened some, blinded others

^{*} Sand me, tam rebementer conturbatunt tun illa fulguta. - Calvul

M Archivard Lifficia religious de l'ancienne Comere, p. 103. Tuthe gang lage blava 1 . Davourer la graca Arendon, Fie de Furch

began to speak. borrowing his fire from the writings of the have caused an indescribable trouble in my soul.* Farel

Among the Franciscans who betened to Enrel nas Jacques flamed by the ardor of the drine spirit. was charmed and encaptured, the souls of many nere inyldmesa adT ‡ gaitest tuother be noting a gliam of bed Some begrn to consider and to reliah the grace which they at work in his our through the ministry of the reformer, hvely feeling of love for Christ. God, as Calvin says, was highlened and inflamed the heart † He excited in many a prophets and apo-tles, says one of his biographers, he en-contributed at least to Bernard's consersion, and ero long he Saul became a new Paul § This first preaching of Furt's was to him as the road to Damascus - that there this new and new ears. It has been eard that the convent at 18110 nan more attentive than Jacque. God gree inm new eyes them. But on the occasion no one m the grand auditory Then, without another word, he rudely turned his back on men to ealute the Virgin and make the sign of the cross-In times past there were schiemanes enough who forbide fore, meeting Furel and Viret, he told them with a sconl: spoken violently against the reformers, and a few days bebeen a sincere worshipper of the Virgin. He had often He was hiely, intelligent, learned, and defiant, and had long Bernard, belonging to one of the best families in Genera.

configuration broke out the next day. The Two Hundred their followers spread the flames through the cuty. The bounds; they includged in terrible bursts of presion, and The wrath of the men devoted to the papacy buen no

But this light, which had enlightened some, blinded others. maintained courageously the truths he had once so much

* Sans me, tam rebemeuter contumbarunt tun illa fulgura. - Calsini

Anrellon, Fie de Farek

^{$ 31} Aminard Adfices religious de Concessor Course, p. 103 1 . Davourer la gruce . . . avalés sans la Loulter .

were hardly met, when Nicholas du Crest, the three Malbuissons, Girardin, and Philip de la Rive, with several others, appeared before them and said: A minister preached the new law yesterday in the cloister at Rive; we wish to know if it was with your consent. At the same moment the ambassadors of Berne arrived and held very different language: 'What we have so long asked for,' they said, 'has been accomplished by the inspiration of God, without our knowing anything of it. The place which you had refused us has been given by the Lord himself. Yes, God, by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, has put it into the hearts of your citizens to have the Gospel preached in the grand auditory. Permit the minister to continue his preaching in that place, and give no annoyance to such as may go to hear him.'

Although, to satisfy the catholics, the Council had at first hinted to the Bernese that as they were returning home, it would be very natural that they should take their ministers with them, Farel continued to preach every day to numerous congregations. His hearers were more convinced than ever of the errors of Rome and of the truth of the evangelical doctrine - things which appeared to them as clear as the day. Many threw aside their supineness; their contrite hearts joyfully received the Saviour's pardon, and, 'caring no longer for the frivolous things so esteemed by the papists,' devoted themselves to works of true innocence and charity. There was great cheerfulness in Geneva. Bands of people paraded the city with songs of joy; groups assembled at the Molard and conversed of the extraordinary things that were taking place. The evangelicals no longer doubted of the victory. A young Savoyard, named Henry Percyn, approaching one of these groups, recognized Baudichon de la Maisonneuve, who, surrounded by several Lutherans, 'was talking to some catholics who were there.' The latter defended their Church: 'Are these three chimney-preachers better than pope, bishop, canons, priests, and monks?' Maisonneuve replied: 'I will bet one hundred crowns to thir, that next Easter not a single mass will be celebrated ended, they rose and said 'Farewell gentlemen of Genera, sist them alone. Accordingly, as soon as the service nastion in the and t of deadly enemies, and without force to renere leveing Earch, Viret, and Eroment milliout profeeattended the evangeheal assembly for the last tune On Saturday, the 7th of March, the Bernese ambas, rdors Bandichov was mistaken, but by a few months only * in General. None of the catholics would accept the nager

n here they hied henceforn and Chaude Bernard took the three evangelists home to his house, slavery into which they have fallen. As he left the hall, d unger they meur in trying to rescue the people from the to commend them, answered a Generese, 'we know the we commend our picachers to you ' t .- ' It is not necessary as it would seem, according to the ritual of Luther $ fort, he conversed with the Luthering and communicated, to believe so When De la Maisonneure reached I rank treating, and jet a contemporary document nould lead us to leave Genera at the importunt epoch of which us are scarcely probable that the two reformers should have cho en able to the Reform), 'drove the preachers away' It is the priests and their friends (for the middle of as was favorseduce' the inhabitants of that city, but the Lauranne c, cannot fix he took Larel and Viret to Lausanne to ' similarly Bernese, on his way to Prankfort on business. At a date we De la Masconneuve departed about the same time as the under foot and the guilty are held to be unoceut, there rises that justice should reign among nations, when it is trappled guilty, the public conscience was satisfied. It is necessary condemned to lo e his head. The last heart gum had the spired with the bi hop again t the liberty of the oil, and Shortly after this, Portier was contacted of hising con-

p. 91 315 de Caut er I llegistra du Con se I du 6 Mars, 1654 fron ent, Gentes de Genère, . MS. du Procès mquis tonnel de Lyon, pp. 226-227

in the breasts of the good a cry of sorrow, we will not say of revenge. But that condemnation was big with important eonsequences for Geneva; it was, says the chronicler, 'a terror to the creatures of the bishop.' As Portier had only earried out the orders of the prince, the condemnation of the servant was that of the master. The episcopal agents began to understand that they must obey the laws and pay respect to lay tribunals. The power of the episcopal faction was broken.*

Farel became more energetic, while, on the other hand, the Franciscan preacher did all he could to support the tottering papacy. It was not only in the same country that these two contrary systems were then in conflict: it was in the same city, in the same house, - the monastery at Rive. One day the cordelier taught in the church that ' the wafer ceases to be bread, and that the mouth receives the body of Jesus Christ; 'while Farel said in the cloister: 'It is true that the life is enclosed in the body of Christ; but we have no communion with him except by a true faith. Faith is the mouth of the soul to receive the Saviour.' In the church the cordelier encouraged the purchase of indulgences, the practice of penances and satisfactions; but in the grand auditory Farel exclaimed: 'All our sins are pardoned freely. How dare the monks, then, set up their satisfactions, which the Word of God has shattered to pieces?'† Gradually the cordelier lowered his tone: the powerful voice of Farel was reducing him to silence. 'You must know,' wrote Madame de la Maisonneuve to her husband, who was at Frankfort, 'you must know that Master William does his duty bravely in announcing the Word of God.' She added: 'We have had no prohibitions: nobody contradicts us. Our business increases greatly.' ‡

^{*} Registre du Conseil du 10 Mars, 1534.

[†] MS. de Gautier. Registre du Conseil du 18 Mars, 1534.

⁴ She dated her letter, De Genève, trois semaines avant Pâques, and signed it: La toute votre femme chèrie, Baudichone. — MS. du Procès inquisitionnel, pp. 23-24.

Mes wars of Fridurg, sternly shaking off their embraces, tion, lavishing on them marks of affection and preject on all eides, and the cutzens ru hed towards the deputs those of Genera. ' Keep them! keep them!' was the cty letters of alliance before the premier syndic, and a Led for in the midst of the assembly of the people, coldly laid their The Friburgers, calm and reserved, then stepped forward who desired the Reform, and it was the same every where. nughty England, it was the priton rather than its leaders ceremony, pulled doun no church. Thus, at Genera, as m them So far as we are concerned, we have abolt hed no suoner stop a torrent than prevent people going to hear we do not set Farel to preach at a the people We could support. Alas I' replied the syndics to the ambassadors, Roman catholicism was filling. Friburg hurried to its and water this offence Auné was kept three days in prison on brend hou e, and kept the shop open as on an ordin ury day bor But still the Levets nould hang no drapery upon their syndics served him with a special order through the police sike the bring God for that multitude of petty gods the them Anne Levet having declared that he would not forcity. The Council ordered the usual honors to be paid oilt dynothi battas otow einen oilt lo eallot ban eognati year at Eister a grand procession took place, m which the power to appears the catholics and I riburgers fivery The alarmed Council now resolved to do all in their departed, learing the letters of albunce on the table

betseention continued in France, three hundred Lutherwas nas often observed to pruse, overcome with subness. I'l o Corpel Ach in the midst of the e numitius norby ho thunders of Smar, or consoled like the Beamindes of the the car of Reform, and his soice by turns altraned like the number after Erster barel energeneally urged forn and not cheeked by it. The Christian meetings mercil ed in to this act of severity, but the eximplical movement uas The consideration due to Triburg had led the magistrates were in prison at Paris. 'What restive horses are these!' he exclaimed. 'They shrink back instead of advancing! What adversaries are springing up against the Redeemer, who reigns with glory in heaven! But God will not forsake his work.' He had still keener sorrows than these: his own brothers, Daniel, Walter, and Claude, had been seized by the enemy from a desire to avenge upon them the evil which the reformer was doing. One of the three, who was younger than himself, had been condemned to imprisonment for life, and his mother, already a widow, was shedding tears of bitterness. 'Alas!' said William Farel, 'her son, who was born after me, has long been in prison, and has greater sorrows to endure than I have.' The reformer applied to friends in high station to obtain his brother's release from the king; but the strictness of the prison had only been increased. 'I know not,' he said, on the 28th of April, 1534, 'who has so stirred the fire. . . . May it please God that the poor prisoner hold firm and declare fearlessly what ought to be said of the good Saviour.' † Farel possessed that filial affection which is serious and respectful towards the father, tender and gentle towards the mother. It made him exclaim in his anguish: 'Alas! the poor widow! O my auguish-stricken mother!' The love he felt for Christ had increased his natural affections.

De la Maisonneuve, having returned to Geneva after Easter, was about to start again-for Lyons. Farel, knowing that his friend, De la Forge, the merchant of Paris, would be going also to that eity at this senson of the year, gave Baudichon a letter for his Paris brethren, at that time so afflicted, directing his letter to the holy vessel elect of God. 'Jesus,' he wrote to this little flock in the capital, 'is the rock of offence against which the world has fought since the beginning of time, and will always fight; but its efforts are

^{*} MS. du Procès inquisitionnel de Lyon, pp. 11-12.

^{† &#}x27;Puisse à Dieu seulement que le pauvre prisonnier pousse outre et déclare sans crainte ce qui doit être dit du bon Sauveur.'—Lettre aux fidèles de Paris. (MS. du Procès inquisitionne de Lyon.)

world should rise against Him' be taken from us let us march onwards, though all the he added 'If we bave Jesus, that heavenly treasure cannot tho perils with which the Parisian merchiat was threatened, De la Forge, commending his brother to him, and knowing reformer's brothers At the same time Farel wrote al o to evangeheals of Geneva were miere ted in the fale of their the Lord entrest you to exert yourselves for him * The the poor fellow could be set at liberty ! All here who fear trait IdO Saguons tant ton et - mid mort beteattie ead tion of his property, six hundred crowns which the bishop pedient to do so What I a protracted detention, the conficer that quarter where you know better than myself that it is exprosper , I bray you, he said, speak of my brother in tercession of the members of the church in behalf of bis their horns, they shall be broken, He then solicited the invain No council can withstand God, and if the nicked lift

Morte estoom it see egamers we noturally bestow attention on their labors, struggles, writings, and trasls, it is well, flowever, to euter sometimes into the anner anneluary of their hearts and of their domestic lives. We are ouchied and regoice to that there are abundance of the most legiuands end tenderest of luman affections. They were men may end and tenderest of luman affections. They were men in well as Christians. This fielt is a proof of the succrity of their piety, it is lake a spring of pure nater gusting up of their piety, it is lake a spring of pure nater gusting up of their piety, it is lake a spring of pure nater gusting up of their piety, it is lake a spring or pure and the gusting up or a field of battle, refreshing and reviving those whom so on a field of battle, refreshing and reviving those whom so many struggles meght have wearred.

· Geneva, April 25, 1534 MS du Procéa inquisitionnel da Lyon.

CHAPTER VIII.

A BOLD PROTESTANT AT LYONS.

(1530 TO 1534.)

Farel, who was so distressed by the long eaptivity of one of the members of his family, little suspected that a friend, loved by him as a brother, would ere long be in a dangeon. De la Maisonneuve, who traded in all sorts of merchandise, but particularly in silk fabrics, jewellery, and furs, had been in the habit of attending the fairs of Lyons for twenty years, and went there as often as three or four times a year. Of late, the frankness with which he maintained the evangelical doctrines had offended many persons, and thus paved the way for a catastrophe which now seemed inevitable. Courted by the merchants, esteemed by the magistrates, he was, on the other hand, in the bad books of the priests, and the priests were powerful.

One day, in the year 1530, when he was at Nuremberg on business, a rich merchant of that city, a sound protestant, who had no love for relics, had given him a valuable reliquary in payment of a debt.* As Lyons was noted for its devotion, Baudichon, who cared little for the object and looked at it only as an article of merchandise, thought it might fetch a good price in that city, and happening to go there not long after, offered the little box to a moneychanger. He would have done better to have refused it at Nuremberg, but Christian wisdom was then only dawning upon him. The money-changer took up the article and examined it devoutly. On the top was an image of St. James in silver, 'carefully wrought,' and weighing about four marks. Underneath was the reliquary: a box of silver for nothing. This affair began to make Baudichon susreply that if he was in Geneva, he would give him relies etrain his anger, moulted him . Maisonneuve was content to passing in front of the bench, the apprentice, untill to rehis merchandise, the huguenot departed But as he was chinger having paid Baudichon seventy livres tournois for mdignant, and sat down on a bench in the street of the age of eighteen, a very digoted youth, left the shop ple to kies to deceive them ' At these nords, an apprentice, pones of some ordinary body which the priests give the peouer, Mayonneuve replied 'It is very blely they are the eurprised that you should bring me this rebe in such a man-Turning to Maisonneuve, he said 'Sir Brudichon, I am curiosity, he made each of them kies the sacred remains. his wife and children had clustered round him with pious as has , thus she reless, and beset than desouly , and as Christopher, St. Syriac, and another He took off his cap, looked with adoration on the precious remains of St. relies were contained within The Lyons money changer perchinent labels indicating the names of the saints who e with a glass allowing the meide to be seen and some little

^{*} MS. du Procès inquisitionnel de Lyon, p. 147.

Next year (1531), when Amsonneuve was again at Lyons, and dinung at the table-d hote of the Coupe d Or he and particularly from Autregues, whose minimizative upright and particularly from Autregues, whose minimizative upright and particularly from Autregues whose minimizative upright guisted at that time by a credulous devotion, as excessive as it was superstituous. The Generate ald not seruple to begoled Autregues conventions bolidly before them, and the begoled Autregues about the Goupe and Jonk at the begoled Autregues about the Goupe and Jonk at the properties of the properties of the properties of the meant in our country, you would be burnt? It you were

A year later (in 1532), also at fair time, De la Maisonneuve, Bournet, a broker to whom he had confided an article of jewellery for sale, Humbert des Oches, and other tradesmen were supping at the table-d'hôte of the Coupe d'Or. It was one of those days on which the Church forbids the eating of meat. Bournet had brought some fish, of which they all partook, and Baudichon among them. This surprised one of the guests, who asked him whether they eat meat at Geneva on fast days. 'Certainly they do,' he answered, 'and if I were in a place where it could be got, I should make no difficulty about it, for God does not forbid it.' - 'The pope and the Church forbid it,' returned Bournet, sharply. Baudichon deelared that he did not aeknowledge the pope's power to forbid what God permits. 'God said to St. Peter,' rejoined Bournet, '" Whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven" (Matthew xvi. 19). The pope is now in the place of St. Peter; therefore'... 'The pope and the priests,' retorted Maisonneuve, 'are so far from being like St. Peter, that there are many among them who lead evil lives, and require to be set in order and reformed. The Word of God alone brings grace to the sinner.' He then began to repeat 'some passages from the Gospels in the French language, selecting those which announce Jesus Christ and the complete pardon he gives. Every Christian who proclaims the Gospel might, he deelared, be God's instrument to liberate souls from sin and eondemnation; and then, growing bolder, he exclaimed: 'I am Petrus; you (turning to Bournet) are Petrus. Every man is Peter, provided he is firm in the faith of Jesus Christ.' All present were much struck with his observations, and the strange man became still blacker in their eyes.*

At the feast of the Epiphany in the year 1533, the brother of Lyonnel Raynaud, priest of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, and Messire Jean Barbier, of the cathedral of Vienne, arrived at the Coupe d'Or, with a elerk in attend-would have him sent to prisoo. The prison and the stake chamber. 'It this man were of Vienne, said Barbier, 'I table, quitted the room bastily, and went into a separate so noinated, that the three priests, suddenly rising from to the arguments of the Viennese, and the contest became ot last to answer you. But the Genevan replied so forcibly soundly heaten, observed to hio: 'You have found a man acquaintance of Baudichon's, and whom the latter had often merchant of Vienne, one Master Simon de Montrerban, an eyes oo the two champioos, and opened their ears wide. A all attention : the guests left off enting and drinking, fixed their with great boldness. This new kind of tournament obsorbed was wrong. The Generan grew more noinnited, and spoke the priest tried with oll his might to prove that Baudichon commandments of the Church, but only those of God; while Baudichon affirmed that we were not required to keep the to produce great fruits. The strife began immediately. he was a truly good man, of sound learning, and one likely descence. 'You did wrong to put him to death,' he said; and electricis. De la Maisonneuve boldly undertook his said Barbier, 'and had taught codless errors at Annonay of n bom we have spoken elsewhere.* 'He was o herelic,' at Vienoe a few years ago?' He alluded to Stephen Renier, you explain to me why they put a certain cordelier to death of Vienoe, and, after a few moments, said to them, 'Can Maisonneuve (for it was be) fixed bis eyes on the priests talked the most, - seemed absorbed io thought. De la guests, however, — and he was usually among those who company. Everybody was speaking at once. One of the ance upon the latter. They sat down to table with the hich followed it were eafer arms than discussion. The Alaisconcure, having returned to Lyons for the fairly see I Lyons for the fairly of Lyons for the fairly of Lyons and of August, met o considerable mumber of the fairly and the fairly arms.

^{*} MS. du Procès inquisitionnel de Lyon, pp. 209, 211, 217, 218.

with p. 16.16. The state of the merchants at the Coupe d'Or, and immediately undertook to enlighten them, feeling that language was given for such purposes; but, as he feared also that his scattered remarks, if not followed up, would be insufficient to correct the tardiness of certain men, he determined to make use of various stimulants. Accordingly, he spared neither toil nor weari-Simon de Montverban, who was there again, was struck with his zeal, and complained of it. 'Whenever the merchants take their meals, he said, whenever he meets them in the common half, when they come in or go out, everywhere and always, Baudichon gets talking and disputing about the Gospel.' No longer confining himself to questions of fasting or images, he went straight to what was essential: he put forward Scripture as the fountain of truth, and declared that every sinner, even the greatest, was saved through uniting himself by faith to Jesus Christ. People censured him in vain. In vain did two merchants, one named Arcon and the other Hugues, repeat to every body and to Baudickon himself that, if he was in their country, he would be burnt; the latter, who did not doubt them, continued his arguments. Lyons was a free city during the fair, and he took advantage of it to make the pure Gospel known. Simon de Montverban complained to the Genevan huguenot's brother-in-law, an ardeut papist, who made answer: 'I wish that Baudichon had died ten years ago; he is the cause of all the troubles at Geneva.'*

De la Maisonneuve was again at Lyons at the feasts of All Saints (November, 1533) and Epiphany (1534). One evening, when a numerous company was supping at the inn, the conversation turned on the religious circumstances of the times. After listening a while, he exclaimed: 'It is nonsense to pray to the saints, to hear mass, and confess to the priests!' and proceeded to quote the Gospels and the Apostles to prove what he said. 'In our country,' again asserted some who heard him, 'at Avignon, at Clermont you would be sent to the stake!' It was the burden of the old cong, and they were only surprised that he was not being, and they were only surprised that it bronze. Do is also-oneure, knowner, well that it was content to smile that he enderthants of turergion rose thus fellon-guest. The merchants of turergion rose from the table in a fit of anger, and, addressing the hoste statement in the table in a fit of anger, and, addressing the hoste statement in the table in a fit of anger, and, addressing the hoste statement in the would not receive Management of the receive Management of the said, we find him here when we come agun, they said, we find him force when we come agun, they said, we find him force when we can agund y the promised shall go and lodge elsewhere. The landing promised the truncations in the tree was a management of the first promised that the first promise of the first promised that the first promise of the first promise here waiting for him and preparing his scalfold. He had Lyons on the 26th, haring no suspicion that his encunta Genera in the morning of the 25th of April, and arrived at De la Massonneuve, bearing Farel's letters, started from to death. 'He was spred and recommended to their cure, I chon's approaching arresul, conjuring them to get him put pope) hastened to give their Lyons friends notice of Bandihas godent our to enserve firstlend business of the bashop and bore of his intentions having gono abroad, ecriain traitors this well, yet he was not n man to be frightened. The reand promises of princes are broken, † Ilaisonneura knew ers, but for the crangelicals all the interious, franchises, there are many franchises for thieres, robbers, and murderanswered. Ay 1' said Froment, 'under the papacy journey 'The fur is free (franche) to every one, he hands on Baudichon's friends wished hun to put off this Genera, and carried off all the Generaus they could lay road, and other strong places, traitors who had sled from were, as we have seen, in the eastlo of Pency on the Lyous threatening and rendered the journey dangerous. There want to miss it. But circumstances had become more the most considerable in the year, Maisonneuve did not The Easter fair of 1534 was drawing near, and as it was the Aurergnals not to receive him in future.

^{*} MS. du Procès inquisitionnel de Lyon, pp. 282-285.

1 leeluy fut exic et recommande. - Froment, bestes de Genere, p. 341

with him Janu the armorer, his inde-dest imp in religious

[•] Me du Procés inquisment de Lyon, pp. 293-200 413-414 f Proment, Gentes de Genere, p. 281

matters, who had supplied himself with evangelical books printed at Neufchatel to circulate them in Lyons. Bandiehon, as usual, had alighted at the Conpe d'Or near St. Pierre-les-Nonnains, and was cordially received by the landlady notwithstanding the promise she had made the Auvergnats some months before. Janin stopped there also and stored his evangelical books away in the room that had been assigned him.

The next day there was a great disturbance at the inn. The merchants had arrived from Auvergne, and one of the first persons they saw was the famous heretie! . . . The color rushed to their checks, and they had words with the hostess because she did not keep her promise. That they did not content themselves with mere words, is clear from events which followed. The bigots of France wished to share with the bigots of Geneva the honor of putting to death the captain of the Lutherans.*

Maisonneuve immediately began to look after Étienne de la Forge, in order to hand him the reformer's letters; but on going to his house in the Place de l'Herberie, he learnt, to his great disappointment, that the Parisian merchant had not yet arrived.

The enemies of the Reformation lost no time. Informations were sworn against Maisonneuve on the 27th of April, the day after his arrival, and the following morning, the 28th, the officers of justice arrested him and his friend Janin 'by authority of the seneschal's court of Lyons,' and shut him up in the king's prison. But this was not what the priests wanted. 'These two men,' they said, 'being charged with offences against our holy faith, the interest of the king our lord, and the common weal, we demand that they be sent to the prison of the archiepiscopal see, and that they be tried before the ecclesiastical judges.'† The two prisoners were accordingly transferred to the archbishop's prison. The great huguenot saw that he had fallen into a trap, and prepared to meet his enemies.

^{*} MS. du Procès inquisitionnel de Lyon, p. 424.

his name, age (forty-six) cars), and condition, and the trial be fore them Baudichon de la Maisonneure, who declared presence. The court being thus formed, they summoned Claude Dellievre, king's advocate, was to aid them by his Ponchon, notary public, was to act as secretary. and was John Gauteret, inquiestor of 'hereueal pravity' Ami vicars-general of the primate of France The third judge edict Buntier, ordinary official of Lyons, -- both of them They were Stephen Faye, official of the primacy, and Benrobes of office, took their sents on the judicial benches the hall of justice of the episcopal prison, and, wearing thur April the members of the inquisitional court assembled in name of the captum of the Lutherran. On the 29th of nalls of that west Gothic huilding echood to the off reperted in princular, took an active part in the business, and the ciergy of the metropolitan church of St John the Bapti-t, men -- all were talking of this fortunato circumstance. The * berlann, "n ardens, provosts, knights, theologram, and schoolthat of John Hues All its dignitaries-the deans, chamwho was Farel's right arm, as Jerome of Prague had been have the glory of trying and putting to death the layman France were honorary canons - that church was about to and dukes among their number, and of which the kings of sevency canons, had mechaled the sons of emperor, kings, statesmen, and ambassadors -- whose chapter, consisting of reed - which had supplied so many condinals, legates, of all the Gauls - of which thurty hishops had been canonchurch of Lyons which had been the church of the primate There was great againton in the episcopal palace. That

† MS. du Procès laquistionnel, pp. 5-6.

pegan 1

All the proces-verbaux or minutes have his eignature, with a currour flourish (parafic) exactly alike on each

CHAPTER IX.

BAUDICHON DE LA MAISSONNEUVE BEFORE THE INQUISI TIONAL COURT OF LYONS.

(FROM 29TH OF APRIL TO 21ST OF MAY, 1534.)

THE tribunal of priests wished to mark distinctly at the very outset that the Romish doctrine was in question; it was necessary to proclaim anew that in instanti, at the very moment, at the priest's word, there was no longer in the host either bread or wine, but only the body and blood of the Saviour. 'What do you think of the sacrament of the altar?' was the first question put by the court to Maisonneuve. He rejected the Roman error; but his protestantism, as we have seen, came from Germany, and the Lutherans taught that 'in the sacrament of the altar, in the bread and wine, were the true body, the true blood of Christ; * and as, according to the Lutheran doctrine, the presence was spiritual, supernatural, and heavenly,† Maisonneuve, who professed this faith and had taken the saerament at Frankfort in the Lutherm church, answered: 'I believe that the real body of Christ is in the blessed host,' I but knowing the axiom of jurisprudence, that no accused person is bound to criminate himself, he would not declare his faith more precisely.

If this doctrine interested the court, the connection of the accused with the chiefs of what they called heresy had also a great importance in their eyes, and a doctor well known in France had given them great umbrage. 'Do you know Pharellus?' they asked Maisonnenve, who calmly replied:

^{* &#}x27;Panam et vinum in cona esse verum corpus et sanguinem Christi.'
Ant. Smalcad. Catech. major, &c.

[†] Intelligimus spiritualem, supernaturalem, cœlestem modum.' - Formula Concordi æ.

t MS. du Procès inquisitionnel, pp. 6-9.

Lunur of pro t som knew Maisonneuve at Genera and Lyons could declare. It custody. Murin hid borne fal a witness, this all who charge him with perjury, and de ire that he be taken mite wounded, I was in this very city of Lyons. I therefore witness does not speak the truth. When the canon was contrast. De la Maisonneuve calmy interrupted him 'Tho Burn on boar , Brudichon was there, armed and ne iring penses. About a year ago a canon numed Wernli was ruu meetings, derecting everything and providing for the ex-Ann Perrin, who commonly were present at the armed was Brudichon, and rifter him Jean Philippe, Jern Golaz, night. Among the most prominent of the Lutheran party ned reols, papiets agrants erangeliets, by dry as well as bu niultiplied exceedingly I witnessed many armed assemblics neva, he said, and during that time the Lutherrn sect trade a weaver 'I lived three years in the city of Geinenty-twe years of age, by name Philip Marin, and by The first who gave evidence was a young working man, power to produce any witnesses for the defeace

On the livit of 21sy a furtical youth, named Prerre, broudley of the two Pennets, who find the two Pennets, who find the two Pennets of the two pennets and conspiring against the behavior of the cuty, gave the ordernee. Then before entirely many of the cuty, gave the ordernee. Then before entirely and the Owe day that behavior seed, he estail, 'then steer and arraned from the public d all the I strict represent the other hands of the day of the two public d all the I strict represent the other prevents and the order of the order of sons and the wounding of many others.'* This also was false: Vandel, a huguenot, had been wounded in a riot got up by the priests; but there had been no deaths. 'The witness hates me,' said Maisonneuve, 'because one of his brothers was executed by judicial authority.'—' Bandichou,' continued Pennet, in greater excitement, 'instead of fearing the syndies, constrains them to humble themselves before him.'—'I submit to lose my head,' exclaimed Maisonneuve, 'in case the syndies declare that I have ever done them any displeasure.'† The court rose.

All this time Geneva was greatly agitated: the news of Bandichon's arrest had caused uneasiness among his friends. Men spoke about it 'in the city and in the fields,' everywhere, When friends met one another, they asked: 'Have you heard that Baudiehon has been brought before the archiepiscopal court of Lyons for being a Lutheran?' The devoit (if we may use the words of the manuscript) consigned him to Satan, as being the principal cause of heresy in Geneva;' t while the lunguenots, agitated and alarmed at the dangers that threatened their friend, considered what was to be done. They determined to net immediately and simultaneously at Lyons, Berne, and even at Paris, if they could. Thomas, Baudichon's brother, started for Lyons at once, and asked for an audience with Monseigneur du Peyrat, the king's Lieutenant-general. 'For what reason,' he said, ' and by what authority has my brother, Bandichon de la Maisonneuve, been sent to prison?'- 'I do not detain him,' answered du Peyrat; 'apply to the vicars general.' Thomas, learning that his brother was in the hands of the priests, and his danger therefore greater, resolved to make every effort to save him.

Thomas and the Genevans were not the only persons interested in this matter. Baudichon's imprisonment was an attack upon the rights of the foreign merchants, and compromised the fairs at Lyons. What German Lutheran

^{*} MS. du Procès inquisitionnel, pp. 34-41.

[†] Ibid. p. 46.

t 'Le donnaient au diablé.' - MS. du Procès inquisitionnel, pp. 87-68

the magistrates. a serious meident soused them from their praests were determined to pay no regard to the request of he cannot be made a prisoner in this kingdom, † The the treattes between the king and the lords of the League, is a burgess of Berne and of Friburg, and by virtue of ation of the inquisitional court. 'Aly brother, said Thoma, Lyons, and one councillor should demand Bandichon's inberresolved that Jean de la Bessie, procurator-general of the consuls seconded the remonstrance † The municipality out reserve, added Thomas de la Maisonneuve. Four of bo violated." -- 'Release my brother, à pur et a plein, nithtore, they said, in conclusion, not to suffer our privileges to which other merchants owed him. 'We pray you, therehim to pay now, because he could not collect the money receive from him certain sums which it was impossible for the privileges of the fairs, and that many merchants had to of Baudichon de fr Maisonneure uns an infringenient of they represented, with much grief, * that the imprisonment it, proceeded to the consulate (or town-council), to whom well of the city as foreigners, determining to complain of a great commotion in the city, and many merchanis, as done to one of then number. There was, consequently, pecuniary loss, and the princes of commerce felt the injury the unbeepers, tradespeople, and merchanis, fore-aw great would come there in future? The inhabitants, especially

A despatch had just arraved, addressed to Monsengment the king's heutenant-general; at was from the lords of Borne. The leutenant-general haew well the while of Swiss intervention. Had not four bundred of them, at the battle of Sear, after Bayard's death, checked, by their methority and the sacrifice of their hyres, the array of the latter in the sacrifice of their hyres, the rany of the latter in the sacrifice of their hyres, the rany of the latter in the sacrifice of their hyres, the creations of the sacrifice and secretary of the sacrifice and secretary secretary in the sacrifice of the latter has a latter than the sacrifice of the sacrifice and secretary secretary of the sacrifice and secretary secretary of the sacrifice and secretary secretary secretary of the sacrifice and secretary secret

Do-Th ag bid1 ;

^{* &#}x27;Fort dolosés' — MS du Procès inquivitonnel, pp. 52, 53 † Henri Anyot, Benolt Bachefort, Pierre Nameier, and Simon Fenet MS du Procès inquisitionnel

tary the necessary instructions. The effect of the despatch was still greater upon Thomas de la Maisonneuve. Now there could be no more delays! Impatient to see his brother at liberty, imagining that he would succeed better by hurrying the affair, he would not wait a day or an hour. He should have considered that haste increases the chances of failure, and that the impatient man compromises both his character and his cause; but he could see nothing but Baudiehou's sufferings and the injury done to the Genevese reformation by his captivity. He was no longer master of himself: he wanted that very instant to deliver his brother from the jaws of the lion. 'Set him free immediately,' he said, 'so that we may be able to answer the lords of Berne by the courier who is ready to return.' The vicars-general answered eartly: 'We are in course to order it, as is right.' * This cold formula appeared of evil omen to Thomas, and from that hour his fears increased.

On the other hand, Baudichou, informed of what was going on, took courage; and the judges, fully aware that it would not do to condemn on suspicious evidence a man who had such powerful supporters, determined to entice Maisonneuve craftily into some heretical declaration.

On the 5th of May the sergeants once more brought in their prisoner. 'What are your opinions in regard to faith? asked the court. De la Maisonneuve answered: 'I am a good Christian; if you do not think so, deliver me over to my superiors (the magistrates of Geneva) to examine me.' But instead of doing so, the viears-general tried to induce him to explain his ideas on the subject of transubstantiation, feeling sure of catching him in an error. The prisoner only replied: 'I am not bound to answer you.' The court tried in vain to induce him to speak: 'I will not make any reply,' he repeated. They read to him Janin's answer on the sacrament, which was (it would appear) very shocking to Roman ears, and asked him what he thought of it; but Baudichon did not fall into the snare. 'I am no judge,' he

c 3.5 and Proces inquies comest pp. 62-62 † Do not a payed of the following the following the following the following the following the following payed by 2.2.

shown in the erse to Beda. After full examination, theretible, and that it was dangerous to thinart him, as he had tional matter. The court knew that branch assured triben up his defence, the trail was becoming an internawhich the king had every rerson to treat courteously, had prisoner was growing in importance a sovereign sail, city as bail for his brother $ The cause of the Genevese Maisonneuve presented two substantial merchants of the the letters from Berne, and at the same time Thomas de in gated by the councillors of Lyons, set forth the contents of the heutenant general of the king. The city clerk, dolewere about to hear the demand of the Suiss, supported by archiepiscopal palace. In public and in the open are they dignitaries, took their seats in froat of the main door of the officials, vicars-episcopal, inquisitors, and other ecclesiastical to their answer On Wednesday, the 6th of May, the lords as Messicuis of Berne, they gave a certain solemnity bly, at least by some formalities, to such high and mightly burn hun, and yet, as it was impossible for them not to reto release Musconneuve, but (as he bad often been told) to

The good or bad. Then thing the officiarite the men est of center Meet in the present of the process of the process of the process of the process of the men who have been and other Frenchmen the run, and a free city, and withdrew the contect proubly volument were left at there, answered the judges, and other Frenchmen there, answered the judges, and other forces, brundenbour to conce people were left at there, answered the judges, and other forces, brundenbour the analysis of the process of the process of the process of the man whom they kept in process of the process of the present of the man whom they kept in process of the process of the man who was a free city, and withdrew the good of the process of the process fore, they decreed that they 'would amply inform the king our sire, in order that he may make known his good pleasure, and until his answer arrives, the said Bandichon shall not be liberated; at the same time, he shall be permitted, on account of his business, to speak with those who have dealings with him, in the presence of the jailers of the archiepiscopal prison, who are enjoined to treat him well and discreetly, according to his station.'

Two points were gained; Baudichon was to be treated like a prisoner of mark, and his case was to be laid before the king. The memory of the estrapades of Paris was too recent for the evangelicals to entertain very lively hopes: it was, however, a gleam of light. The judges themselves, feeling that the matter was becoming difficult and success doubtful, undertook to obtain a recantation from Bandichou, which would, besides, be more glorious for Rome (they thought) than a sentence of death. On the 21st of May, therefore, the court having called to their nid two inquisitors skilful in controversy, Nicholas Morini and Jean Rapinati, summoned Maisonneuve before them; when Father Morini endeavored to prove to him out of Scripture the material presence of Christ in the Sacrament. Baudichon understood the passages quoted differently from the doctors. Refusing to stop at the material substance, the flesh (as they did, and also the people of Capernaum who are blamed in the Gospel), he held to our Saviour's words: It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life.† - 'I understand these words as well as you, and better, but I will not enter into any discussion. I am not bound to answer inquisitors.' The court, provoked by these refusals, resolved to put the grand question to him: 'Do you yield obedience to our holy father the pope of Rome?' To the great disappointment of the vicars-general and inquisitors, he simply replied: 'I am not bound to

^{*} MS. du Procès inquisitionnel, pp. 69-76.

[†] St. John vi. 63.

[‡] MS. du Procès inquisitionnel, pp. 91-94.

monwer? — 'We are your Judges in this matter,' they excclaimed with irritation, ' we order and summon you to angraver' • But he would not, and then, recovering from their smoother, they tried to surprise than by an insidious question Abexander, who had precedied the Gospel at Lyons will full, nonneuve acknowledged hum for his friend, they might such chass them together. The judges therefore acked hum insidiously, 'whether Jacques de la Croxx, dates Abexander, had not in former times eaten and drunk at his bonse?' — had not no former times eaten and drunk at his bonse? "
'If he has eaten and drunk at my house,' responded Bandie.
'If he has eaten and drunk at my house,' responded Bandie.

Thus did the judges hunt down an unnocent man At that time mon set the indiges hunt down an unnocent man At that time mon set the indiges hunt down an unnocent man At the time mon set the indiges has no concern against Heaven. Such a grave consideration imparts a tragic interest to this trush and encourage us concententionally to reproduce all its pandil phases. The dominion of man ends where that of God begins? † God does not give his givy to snother. When the Corator 'The dominion of man ends where that of God begins? † God does not give his givy to snother. We present desires to exercise unbonty over the concentration.

elon, 'I hope it did him good' And that was all. It was

* MS du Procès inquisitionnel, pp. 95-96.

move God from his throne and sit in his place.

CHAP. X.

CHAPTER X.

THE TWO WORSHIPS IN GENEVA.

(MAY TO JULY 1534.)

WHILE they were prosceuting Maisonneuve on the banks of the Rhone and the Saône, the struggle between catholieism and reform became more active on the shores of Lake Leman: an evangelical was threatened with death at Lyons, but Roman-catholicism was on the point of expiring at Gen-It was crumbling away beneath its own weight: the religious orders, and especially the Franciscans, which had been founded to support it, were now shaking its founda-Notorious abuses and scandalous disorders were making the protest against monkery and popery more necessary every day. At the very moment when the trial was beginning at Lyons (3d of May), an honorable lady of Geneva, Madam Jaquemette Matonnier, passing near the Franciscan convent, observed a woman noted for her disorderly life stealthily entering the building. 'It would be better for you.' she said, "to stay with your husband.' At these words, two monks who were standing at the door rushed violently upon Madame Matonnier and beat her until the blood came. This incident, which soon became known, aroused the whole city. The syndics went to the eonvent, shut up the two monks in the prison, and took away the key. 'Men who live in convents,' said the people, 'ought not to be stained with such depravity; and yet it is hard to find one monastery out of ten that is not a den of wantonness rather than the home of chastity.'

Sin begat death. The Romish clergy destroyed themselves by the abominable manners of a great number of their members. But better times were beginning; morality

Reformation would not have existed been wanting, the other would not have sufficed, and the truth with the life, doctrine with morality. If one had have restored to Christendom religion in its entirety, the essential element. The grand title of the Reformation is to Block and its appropriate title. Such in assertion omits one against formalism is the great fact of the Reformation, its an emment Christian has said, that the reaction of morahity and make them produce every fruit We do not ear, as their sterile branches, would cover them with rich foliage ecason was beginning, which, by bringing back the cap into ness under the rays of the sun, but are all frozen. A new n hose frost-covered branches glitter n ith a certain bright wanting Religion was at that time like those winter trees these pomps y uned in immense void futh and hie were paintings, and harmonions chants, but in the midst of all cathedrals, nealthy pontalls, sumptuous rites, admirable grammy of the stateenth century! There were magnificent end spectacle was that presented by the Church at the bethrough Christendom the potent germs of a new life A which they had been buried so long, and were spreading was pringing, in company with faith, from the tomb in

While foomen entholosem was felling lower through the disorders of the monles, everagelical Christianity wer rense through the zerd of the reformers. I truck, Vivel, and Fromment prevented every day, either publicly or in private houses, to the great advancement of the Word of God, which increased much? The Reform-thon was no longer a micro feaching, it entered into the manners and working mind produced life. On the Singary infor Insier, Furch and produced life. On the Singary in the Singary in the Singary of the first evengelical maintange.

When encere catholies, and even those who were not so, saw these strange contrasts, they uncounced that the last hour of the proper in Genera had arrived. A first eliberate ho made, but unfortunately the emodies employed were not much better than the disease. One day a report spraced instantaneously through the whole caty that the spraced instantaneously through the whole caty that the Blessed Virgin, arrayed in white robes, had appeared to the curate in the church of St. Leger, and ordered a grand procession of all the surrounding districts. She added that if this were done, 'the Lutherans would all burst in the middle: but if the order was not obeyed, the city would be swallowed up.' * The huguenots smiled, inquired into the matter, and at the end of authentic investigations, discovered that the fine lady was the curate's housemaid.' But many catholics in Geneva, and almost all in Savoy, were convinced of the reality of the apparition. The clergy mustered their forces. 'It depends upon you,' they said in many places, 'to put all the heretics in Geneva to death.' The devotees of the neighboring parishes began to stir in this pious work, and on the 15th of May a long procession of men, women, and children arrived before the city. They were heard singing lustily in the Savoyard tongue -

More de Dy, pryy pou nous! (Mother of God, pray for us!)

The Council, fearing a disturbance, would not let them enter, and they had to be content with going to Our Lady of Grace, near the Arve bridge. As the poor people had eaten nothing on the road, and were exhausted, the syndics sent them bread; and after taking some refreshments, the assemblage turned homewards. Many Genevese, anxious to see them close, went out of the city, and collected on their road, and as the Savoyards passed before them singing Mare de Dy, pryy pou nous! the bantering hugenots answered to the same tune: Frare Farel, pregy toujours! Brother Farel, preach forever! †

All was not over: the story of the apparition of the Virgin and of her commandment having reached as far as the capital of the Chablais, the heights of Cologny were soon crowned by a numerous and compact procession, in ap-

^{* &#}x27;Les luthériens crêveraient par le milieu . . . la ville s'abymerait.'— Froment, Gestes de Genève, pp. 92, 93.

[†] Registre du Conseil du 15 Mai, 1534. Froment, Gestes de Genève.

presence of Clirist Church with a multitude of rites is to rob her of the worship ought not to be a spectacle, and that to burden the Savoyntes They neve beginning to understand that public Prerre's touched them bitle more than the fetichi in of the degust for Roman catholicism even the pomps of St. those pality relies, mepired the reformed with a still deeper therans These processions, these brancts of the Virgin, calculated only on their litanies in their war against the Luhad failed, but no rather believe that these devout pulmina had not had time to join with those from without, the plot the city Froment supposes that as the enemy from within grims threw away their banners with affright, and fled from as if it were a village of the Chablais. The startled pilpoint of the sword the Savoyards who had entered Genera and, charging the head of the procession, drove back at the the fiery Perrin, the energeite Goulaz, and others, went out, retormer did not disturb himself, but some of his hearers, Parel nas preaching, announced this Romish invasion The namedately some cutzens entering the auditory where halted before the church of St. Claire. The alarm spread to prevent them, and on reading the Bourg de Cour, the huguenots, who nere lestening to Farel, not being there The stain art pillims boldly passed the gates of the city, crosses, and relies, were descending the hill with a firm step Thouson and the adjoining phices, who, carrying banners, pearance more formulable than the first at was the men of

The authority displayed by these catholic bruds came to boldened some of the largenetis If Stroyards came to boldened some of the largenetis and the content of the bost to show their some both leaded members of the lections to show their Stroy because of the lections of reprehensible acts.

Whenever they went to the Irranged of St. Anthony of Padam, a minacle monger of the Introduction content; the Anthony of Padam, a minacle monger of the Introduction content state of St.

irritated the huguenots. It was vain to tell them that pictures are the books of the ignorant: the reformers answered that if the catholic prelates left the duty of teaching the people to idols, they would prefer remaining at home in their chairs. 'If you had not taken the Bible from the Church,' said the huguenots, 'you would have had no necessity to hang up your paintings.' Accordingly, between eleven and twelve o'clock one Saturday night, nine men carrying a ladder approached the convent, raised it silently against the porch, and then, with hammers and chisels, began to destroy the images. They cut off the head and limbs of the saint, leaving only his trunk; they did the same to the others, and threw the fragments into the well of St. Clair. The night passed without any disturbance, but in the morning there was a great uproar in the city. 'What a piteous sight!' said the devout assembled before the porch of St. Francis. The iconoclasts, who were discovered after a little time, were punished, but the images were not restored.

'Alas!' said the Friburgers, 'Geneva is about to pull down the altars of the Romish faith!'—'It is,' answered the Bernese, 'because upon these very altars the bishop desired to burn the venerable charters of her people, and has sprinkled them with the blood of her most illustrious citizens.'* . . . Sensuous worship no longer pleased the Genevans. Those labored pictures, those sculptured angels, those dazzling decorations, that charm of ceremonies and edifices, those shafts and pediments, those unintelligible chants, those intoxicating perfumes, those mechanical performances of the priests, with their gold and lace—all these things disgusted them exceedingly. Since God is a spirit, they said, those who worship him must worship him in spirit, by the inward faith of the heart, by purity of conscience, and by offering themselves to God to do his will.

^{*} Registre du Conseil des 4, 11, 13, 30 Avril; 5, 14, 15, 17, 24, 26 Mai, and 12 Juin. Sœur Jeanne, Levain du Calvinisme, p. 89. MS. de Berne, Hist. Helv., v. 12. Froment, Gestes de Genève, pp. 119, 120.

former had penetrated to the very bottom of men a hearts. ing words that sounded only in the air, the voice of the reconsuces, as if at noonday ' Thule the priests were chantflames of human candles, but Christ, the great sun of right of these who filled the Grand Auditory 'were not the petty to the seed from heaven What now shone hefore the eyes them as the ploughshare cleaves the earth, and opened them ment - all the e events had stirred their hearts, hid cleif syndics, the rupture with Friburg, Mai onneuve's imprisonwhich God had frustrated, the nomination of the luguenot pared his audience. The plot of the bishop and the duke discourse hore good fruit. Several circumstinces had pre-Fother, Son, and Holy Ghost, the only true God, and that his pore, but we know that he ended it by giving glory to the We have not his Whitsunday cormon, he preached extemthe Gospel's to pray that the Spirit might be given them lo Enthacard all reside this Enthaugust the preaching lo another city has not a single drop," and therefore be contout , God sends rain upon one city when he pleases, while Farel preached with ferror He was accustomed to eay sorted thither, but new heavers were added to the old ones temps, Roset, Levet, with their wives and friends, who re-Great Anditory It was not only such as Vandel, Chanarraved. On that day a large crowd had assembled in the really celebrated in Geneva the Feast of Pentecost had The hour had come when this spiritual worship was to be

The proof was soon vable in the Lord's Supper publicly, according to the Go pet form, incl. Lord's Supper publicly, according to the Go pet form, and, standing with his brouting in Vivet and Fromean border a table, he gave thrush, book the brach, broke in, and steen, litting up the cup, he and disculture up the cup, he will be a former to the control of the result of the control of the control

I Du eras wange, La

Parel s words. See p 242 of the solume recently published in commencements of the tercentenser of his death (Du erai mange de la croux de Jeus Crouk, "euchael 1868)

is shed for the remission of sins? The believers were beginning to draw near to receive the communion of the Lord,* when an unexpected circumstance fixed their attention. A priest of nuble stature, wearing his sacerdotal robes, left the place where he had been sitting among the congregation, and approached the table. It was Louis Bernard, one of the twelve habilités of the cathedral, possessor of a wealthy benefice, and brother of him who had been touched at the time of Farel's first preaching. Was he going to say mass? did he want to dispute with Farel? or had he been converted? All were unxious to see what would happen. The priest went up to the table, and then, to the general surprise, he took off his sacerdotal vestments, flung away cope, alb, and stole, and said aloud: 'I throw off the old man, and declare myself a prisoner to the Gospel of the Lord.'† Then, turning to the reformers and their friends, he said: 'Brethren, I will live and die with you for Jesus Christ's sake.' All imagined they saw a miracle; $\frac{1}{2}$ their hearts were touched. Farel received Bernard like a brother; he broke bread with him, gave him the cup, and, eating of the same morsel, the two adversaries thus signified that they would in future love one another 'with a sincere and pure affection.' The priest was not the only person who threw off the foul robes of his ancient life, and put on the white robe of the Lord. Many Genevaus from that day began to think and live differently from their fathers; but Louis Bernard was a striking type of that transformation, and the crowd, as they quitted the church, could not keep their eyes off him. They saw him returning full of peace and joy to his father's house, wearing a Spanish cape instead of the usual priest's hood. All the evangelicals, -

^{* &#}x27;Gebennis hac Pentacoste cum innumeri cœnam peragerent dominicam.' — Haller to Bullinger, 4th June, 1534. MS. Arch. Eccl. Tigur.

^{† &#}x27;Veterem hominem exuens et se Evangelii eaptivum exhibens.' - Haller, ibid.

^{‡ &#}x27;Est in miraculum.' - Haller to Bullinger, 4th June, 1534. MS. Eecl. Tigur.

' men, women, and children, — went with great joy to greet him and make their reverence."

of the Gospelt murtyrs of liberty, was to have in Gaudet the first martyr That city which had seen in Berthelier and Levrier the maint and mid berieses received him he a friend. Christian communion, he had come to his hrethren that bo be had taken refuge with him; but feeling the need of league from Geneva — the commander of Compasives a forced him to flee. Having an uncle living about a the world in contempt. The scandal he had thus occasioned chosen for his glory the cross of the Son of God, he held near Paris, he had heard the Gospel, and that, baring was Pierre Gaudet, related how, being born at St. Cloud, this one come to Genera? The ex-knight, whose name Soliman, and had finally settled in Malia. But why should in the Holy Land, bad been expelled from Jerusalem by that those warlike monks, instituted to defend the pilgrims was a strange visitor in that city. It was known confusedly to Geneva in search of liberty of faith. A knight of Rhodes of that first evangeheal Pentecost, a knight of Rhodes came increased the beauty of this festival. During the rejoicings Another circumstance, quite as extraordinary, still further

While the Worl of God was forming new manuers the contrast of the old manuers asserted itself was contrast of the old manuers asserted itself was been been contrast of the lower classes — men and women, yould mand much make the recent and merry-andrews made the recent of the women of St. Gerrais, disgulated and their function in the streets, and merry-andrews made the eartying hunches of box, set the example to those of the carrying hunches of box, set the example to those of the carrying hunches of box, set the example to those of the older quarters. The young men united with them, and of the inguist supersection of the carrying hunches of box, set the earth of the common use at that the street of the common use at that the contrast of the common use at that time. - La deut Jennes, Lerana da Calcinaine, p. 80. † Registre du Conseil du 29 Juni, 1955. Crespin, Martyrologies, p. 114.

chand, a huguenot no doubt, who was very ready with his hands, being caught hold of by a woman who wanted to make him dance with her, gave her a slap on the face. There was a fierce disturbance; and the Council consequently forbade these dancing promenades, and ordered that every one should be content 'to dance before his own house:' and this was surely enough. From that time such idle processions were not repeated. While the catholic common people were indulging in wanton sports, not perceiving that they were dancing round the open grave of Roman-catholicism, the evangelicals increased in zeal and faith to extend the teaching of the Word of God; and a gentler and more Christian life was about to be naturalized in that small but important city. The Whitsuntide procession of 1534, with its coarse jests, was, in Geneva, the funeral procession of popery.*

Indeed, the laity were then learning better things than those which the monks had taught them. It was not the ministers alone who labored; simple believers practiced the ministry of charity. If there chanced to be in any house a man 'very rebellious,' opposing the doctrine of Scripture, his friends, neighbors, and relations, who had tasted of its excellence, would go to him, and without offending him, without returning him evil for evil, 'admonish him with great mildness.' The evangelicals invited certain of their friends, even strangers and enemies, to their houses to eat and drink, in order that they might speak more familiarly with them. All their study was 'to gain some one to the Word.' †

In the neighboring countries, in Savoy, Gex, Vaud, and the Chablais, not only did the enemies of Geneva use threats, but made preparations to attack it. There was much talk in the city of the assaults that were to be made by the forains, the aliens; and accordingly there was always a number of citizens kept under arms. Farel, Viret, and i 'Gaigner quelqu'un à la Parolle.' — Froment, Gestes de Genève p. 127.

^{*} Registre du Conseil des 31 Mai et 2 Juin, 1534.

Proment often joined these coldiers of the republic during BOOK AIF THE REPORMATION IN EUROPE

wou to the Gospel than by public preaching. At these assemblies and watches more people have been turnal meetings he had held at the military posts, exclaimed one of the evangehols of Geneva, calling to mind the nocversations of the bivouse' recorded here. In later times, hitherto been in doubt. Not without reason are these 'conresolved in heart upon religious points about which they had and sometimes before they left their posts, the citizens were and freely objected and replied to what the preacher said," noung and answering one another 'Each man familiarly torches, they would converse together about the truth, queson the ramparts, by the glare of the bivouae fires or the their night-watches, rod sitting near the gates of the city or

CHAPTER XI

FORE THE COURT OF LYONS BOLDNESS OF TWO RUGUENOTS IN PRISON AND BE-

(BEAT MOUNT 1534)

of Genera it the Julice's table, in the halls and Entsand as much at his ersers as it be deen in the electis ing the knowledge of the Gospel in their prison Janua relding anything to their adversaries, were boldly spreaderally a fatal termination, for Baudichon and Janin, far from the evangelicals could not be complete. They feared gen was threatened with extreme pumishment, the trumph of sonneuve So long re the intreprie captain of the Lutherans nots were not to be con oled for the imprisonment of Mu In the mulat of these dangers and struggles the Hugue

* Froment Genten de Genere, pp 126, 127

leries and elsewhere, the armorer argued about the faith. One day, meeting Jacques Desvaux, a priest of the dioeese of Le Mans, Janin took him to task and tried to convert him to the Gospel. He spoke to him of the apostles and the saints, and showed him how they had always taught doctrines opposed to those of Rome. He did more. garden was attached to the prison, and the prisoners were allowed to walk in it at eertain hours. One day, shortly before the festival of the Rogations, Janin went into it, taking a French Testament with him, and began to read it. When he had done he left the book, not unintentionally, on a low wall, and went away. A priest named Delay (there was no lack of ecclesiasties in the archiepiscopal prison) passing near, observed the book, took it up, and, opening it, read: The New Testament. A Testament in French! Delay began to examine it: a number of prisoners, priests and others, gathered round him; he turned over the pages in search of the First Epistle of St. John, 'because on that day the Church mentioned it,' but could not find it.*

From the place in the garden to which he had retired, Janin saw Delay looking for something. Going up to him, the Genevese asked what he wanted. On being told, he took the book, immediately found the epistle (those laymen of Geneva knew their Bible better than the priests), and began to read the first chapter aloud, dwelling upon the words: The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. He stopped, and addressing the prisoners, explained the words, and drew their attention to two doctrines which, he said, can never be made to harmonize: that of the Bible, according to which we are cleansed by the blood of Christ; and that of Rome, according to which we are cleansed by meritorious works. 'You explain the passage wrongly,' exclaimed some of his hearers: 'we must not follow the letter. but the moral meaning.' It is an argument we have seen revived in more recent times. 'You cannot understand

^{*} MS. du Procès inquisitionnel de Lyon. Déposition Desvaux, pp. 99, 100; Déposition Delay, pp. 112, 113.

t lbid Depos tion Desvaux pp 105, 105, Deposition Delay, pp. 116, 103 Debos non Delay pp itt its, 124, † M'S du l'rocès inquisitionnel de Lyon. Déposition Desvaux, pp. 100-# J 2t Peter #

On Monday, the 11th of May, the festival of the Roga t Lion Band ou st dead, we are sared or condemned for everlasting, and there need of them, said the armorer, 'for as soon as we are prayers for the dead, suggested another - There is no must not pray to her or to the saints in paradise '-- And The presences who listened to him, wishing, perhaps, to be om Him who has nashed us from our sins. But no that ever existed in the world, maximuch as she horo in her memon realed on the Wirgin Mary was the noblest woman again 'The Virgin Mary, began one Janin, interruptprolong a discussion that minused them, started the huguenot Vret, had no warmer friend Sull, the ministers, Furel and the more good they do spirits who unagine that the more they startle their hearers, Horse est corpus meunt I dann was one et those darng the house, in the Litchen ' He then began to repeat aloud lieve his accusers, he added 'You may oven utter them in mental words, like the other priests' And, if we are to bejust as much a priest as any man, and can give absolution priesthood taught by St. Peter, exclaimed boldly 'I am

God has made us all priests. I can pronounce the sacraministry of the Word, firmly helieved in the universal the apostles, Janu, who, though honoring the special of priests and doctors who, in this norld, hold the place of the Holy Church, to hear Scripture explained by the mouths t is also true that all good Christians draw near our mother, the priests 'pradicate Evangelium omni creatura, but and therefore in all langurges '- That is true, answered manded his apostles in preach the Go pel to all creature, answered Janua, 'for I do not understand Latin God comat in French' — ' Surely I must read at in my own language,' that epistle, said a priest, since you are obliged to read tions afforded the prisoners a spectacle calculated to break the uniformity of their lives. They proceeded to the garden, and presently a noisy crowd gave indications of the grand procession, which was now returning to St. John's church, adjoining the archiepiscopal prison, whence it had started. The priests went first, with crosses and banners, reciting prayers or singing hymns; after them came the people. De la Maisonneuve and Janin said that such a ceremony was an abuse, and that it would have been far better to have given to the poor the money which those fine banners had cost. The procession having at last reëntered the church of St. John, the singing, shouting, and noise became insupportable, even in the garden. Baudichon, according to the evidence of one of his necusers, withdrew, saying: 'Those people must be fools and madmen, or do they imagine that God is deaf?" *

The next day the festival continued, and just as the prisoners were going to dinner, the noise of singing was heard. It was a new procession. 'Where do they come from?' asked Maisonneuve. The jailer's wife answered: 'From the church of St. Cler.' 'And what have they been doing there?' said Baudichon; 'have they been looking for St. Cler? They will not find him or God either, for they are in Paradise; and it is great nousense to look for them elsewhere.' †

On the 28th of May, the depositions made by the prisoners with reference to the language used on the Rogation days were read. 'I would sooner be torn in pieces,' said De la Maisonneuve, 'than have uttered the words contained in that deposition.' † The Court having summoned the priest Delay before them, the latter declared that he adhered to the main points, with the exception of the words

^{*} MS. du Procès inquisitionnel. Déposition Desvaux, pp. 106, 107 Déposition Delay, pp. 118, 119.

[†] Ibid. Déposition Galla, pp. 118-151: Déposition de Gynieux dit Nego pp. 154-156.

[†] Ibid. p. 121.

воок ип

* sb1047 I did not hear him use the other paid for the hanners that it nould bave been better to give the poor the money ascribed to Baudichon 'He only said, continued Delay, tan cluef † me My lords of Berno will not suffer them to do us any hundred crowns, then that any harm should come to Jou or be firm, and make no onswer I would sooner it cost me five to Junn, who was already mendo. Do not fact yourself, and desired to cheer him Leaning igniost the door, he said sooneuve camo up he knew the state of his friends soul as he was about to re-enter his norrow cell, Do la Maipresent. He quitted the chapel, desceted and silent. Just had not been accustomed to do before, said one ulto was during the service, but behaved himself decently, which he from refusing, did not beiray the lea t sign of opposition a mass n luch the other presences bad asked for, Janua, far entakey having gone to fetch him from his dungeon to hear that he nould never see Genera again On Whitsundry, a death as certain, and was quite unmanned by the thought such temperaments. He looked upon his condemnation to two prisoners, now began to grow dispirated, as is usual with Jump, who had hitherto been the most ardent of the great mger) I will have bim langed!' Manieter, Joffril a he I demand that he be detuned, and (he added m Phot witness is a little bergrad, a young thick, he has told unbecoming words ascribed to him, Bandichon exclaimed sell relica there at the butchers' stalls' t On hearing it e horse load of relies for a dozen arguilettes T.yek shop 'Pshaw i if you were at Genera I would give your e raterin end do roob out tr mud of bins Zurerd do suponnos exidence multiplied Louis Joshillet accused De la Ini

Janin s alarm was not, however, without found then falso

I If d Deposit on de Joffrillet, pp 136 137 Debos tou de Mochon ibr 120 121 Debos ton de Bilet, pp. 107-129, Is most a ug m assort ub Ric f tot q lannott a upur a boon i ub Bil #

let's master, deposed that he had no recollection of such words being used by De la Maisonneuve.*

All these depositions, De la Maisonneuve's courage, and the interest felt for him in high places, created a greater excitement every day in the second city of France. 'There was much noise in Lyons about those two Lutherans of Geneva.'† Some eagerly took their part; others, who detested them, hoped to see them burnt. But as the two protestants had powerful protectors, the clergy dared not proceed to extremities without sufficient proof. The canons of St. John sent M. de Simieux, a gentleman of Dauphiny, who was related to one of them, to Geneva to try and hunt up some capital charge against Baudichon. De Simieux alighted at the Hôtel de la Grue, in the Corraterie, and immediately entered into conversation with the landlord, who promised to introduce him to some worthy people, from whom he would receive accurate information about that wretched Baudichon.I

Meanwhile, the gentleman amused himself by walking up and down in front of his lodging. Presently he saw fifteen persons, 'of the most respectable of the city,' approaching, who saluted him and said: 'We have heard that you are come from Lyons; is it true that Baudichon is about to be released?' De Simieux asked the gentleman what they thought of the prisoner. 'If he is discharged,' said one of them, 'we and all the Catholics in Geneva will be totally ruined and lost. His accomplices, the Lutherans of the city, have prepared their plan, and the only thing they are waiting for, before putting it into execution, is Baudichon's release.' 'Yes, yes,' said all the fifteen, 'we are sure of it.' §

^{* &#}x27;Recors de tels propos et paroles.'— MS. du Procès inquisitionnel, pp. 138-140; Déposition de Manicier, p. 144.

[†] Froment, Gestes de Genève, p. 241.

[‡] Froment, Gestes de Genève. The inn of La Grue was, it would seem, the projecting corner house on the left as you go from the Rhone, before reaching the museum.

MS. du Procès inquisitionnel, pp. 184-196.

De Simieux asked them to specify some overt act. 'On Corpus Christiday, said one, 'as the procession was pas ing Brudichon's liouse, his wife was at the window with her maid, and hold were spinning with their distributed by lose lier distributed by the spinning with their distributed be not sufficient to burn the husbrad, De Simieux a Led passing by twos hefore her?" As his transf. Of the wife for conceiling more 'It is notequer,' they toid him, that make not sufficient to burn the husbrad, De Simieux a Led Rosery to the Lutheran hereage, that it was he who of Genery to the Lutheran hereage, that it was he who of Genery to the Lutheran hereage, that it was he who of Genery to the Lutheran hereage, that it was he who of Genery to the Lutheran hereage, that it was he who of Genery to the Lutheran hereage, that it was he who

with the time of the control of the Meaniume, maiters were looking worse at Lyons On Thursday, the 18th of June, Tlorinond Pécoud, the mer-bruit sersoired his deposition which he falsely a cribed the Bandrehom. 'Telling him one dry finit I had just come from mest, and Pécoud, 'Bandstedon Intert I had just come from mest, and pecoud, blandstedon intered in the contract "And whirt did you see there?

these words the prisener rose indignantly, and said to the judges 'I will not make any reply, I have made too many already' and proceeded to kerie this hill 'We order you to stry, said the judges, but De in Ausonneuse would not

^{*} MS du Procen inquisitionnel pp 197, 198

l fegratres da Conseil du 10 Jun 1234

^{$ 37}s someone combered the best to wellcast furnish - one of the com-

stop. 'Positively,' said the judges, looking at each other, 'he flees our presence.' To the jailer who was sent after him to bid him return, he answered haughtily: 'I am not disposed at present; let them wait until after dinner. Baudichon reappeared in the afternoon, but his anger had not cooled down. 'I know that Pécoud,' he said; 'he has cheated the merchants, he has been a bankrupt, and his wife and he live by the debauchery of others. I guarantee to prove what I say.'

The next day there was a scene quite as lively. Maisonneuve having contradicted a witness: 'I command you to sit in the dock,' said the president. 'I will not sit in the dock,' answered the citizen of Geneva; 'I have sat there too long.' This was too much for the judges. The procurator-fiscal ordered Baudichon to be taken away and put in solitary confinement: no one was to speak to him. The prisoner was accordingly removed and locked up.*

The Court immediately increased the number of witnesses for the prosecution: it is useless to name them. De la Maisonneuve, more indignant than ever, thought it enough to say: 'They are false witnesses, tutored to procure my death.' †

Such was indeed the intention of the Court, and, considering the power of the ecclesiastical tribunals, it seemed impossible they should fail to attain their end. De la Maisonneuve was not prepared to die. His knowledge of the Gospel had stripped death of its terrors in his eyes, but the work of his life was not terminated: the reformation of Geneva was not accomplished, there was still many a tough contest to be fought for liberty. A man of resolution was wanted at Geneva — a man to launch the bark with energy towards the happy shores it was to reach. That man was De la Maisonneuve.

On the 1st of July, seeing the eagerness of his adversaries, he petitioned the court to grant him an advocate.

† Ibid. pp. 222-238.

^{*} MS. du Procès inquisitionnel. pp. 189-191.

The judges would not consent the prosecution was difficult frough already. The case does not require it, said the procurator fiscal, the recursed must answer by his own mouth. The said Baudehon is not an ignorant man, he is prudent and estute enough in his business.

I visolali I appeal to lus the muries I have suffered you, and force you to make compensation and reparation for speedy justice, if you refuse, I will prosecute each one of om op of the kingdom, and added 'I eall upon you to do me and no quillority to take cognizance of anything to had done had already lasted three months, contended that his judges minded them of the fact of his unjust imprisonment, which standing before his judges with the piper in his hand, reword ' Ho nas permitted to do so, upon which Baudichon, the minutes of the trial, and propo e to read it word for written by my own hand, I desire that it be meeted among bers, he said, as he pointed to them 'This document was had resolved to protest against it. Producing certain pa-Anticipating, however, the unjust refusal of his judges, he mid beamers of his heart, but a formal defence alarmed him De la Massonneuve could indeed speak freely tu the up-

The vectes general could not believe their cars. What unpudence! The accused presumes to attract the members of the Court, and the judges are to be put on their defence. Are they not the representatives of the Church? You have one of the content of the proceeds solely from your having refused to answer us. We cannot send you before the syndies of General, before the syndies of General, because, is larger than you demun concerning the offices, the large have no send and officers the larger than the larger than the committee of the larger than the larger pope? We are judges of your faith, and we require you to answer, under pain of excommunication and other lawful penalties.' 'I will not answer,' returned Maisonneuve, quite as determined as they, 'and I appeal from your order to every court in the kingdom.' After this answer, Baudichon, in the eyes of the Court, was nothing but an obstinate heretie. The inquisitor, Morini, conjured him to return to the catholic faith. It was useless.*

A man who struggled with so much courage against unreasonable judges, who, in their despotism, claimed the right to forbid him to display before God the faith, homage, and obedience which his conscience imposed upon him,—a man who, in the first half of the sixteenth century, bearded the inquisitors even in sight of the stake, as if his forehead had been made of adamant, harder than flint, deserves some respect from an easier age, which is no longer called to such combats, and which perhaps would be unable to sustain them.

CHAPTER XII.

SENTENCE OF DEATH.

(July 1534.)

The judges and priests, though determined to free the Church from such a dangerous enemy by pronouncing the capital sentence upon him, resolved to make a last effort to obtain a condemnatory confession from him. The procurator-fiscal, looking at Baudichon, said: 'Considering the arrogance and temerity of the accused, considering that he is not sufficiently attainted by the witnesses, we order that he be constrained to answer concerning his faith, and to that

^{*} MS. du Procès inquisitionnel, pp. 251-259.

ุ 1 เราซีอนใ chon, 'I would never answer you, for you are not my were to remain here a prisoner all my bie, sud Baudifavor he had only to answer concerning his faith Ţ.H. lisd no grounds of complaint, and that if he wished any mach radeness and crueity. The judges answered that he have behaved tyrannously to me, be said, and shown me of the indignities to which he had been exposed fore the Court on the 13th of July, be complained strongly was treated in a hard and cruel minner. Appening benothing relative to his panishment, we can only find that he out? That is more than we can tell, we have discovered oned under the roof Was the order of the Court carried torture to be employed . De la Musonneure was impris quisitors, but there nere no instructions as to the bind of to be exposed to the horrible torments practiced by the mend be put to the torture. The noble minded citizen was

The Court then resolved to try it they could not obtain from him some semi-catholic formula which would antiborize them to publish his recentration, or, in definit to thair, some very lierenteal declaration which would justify their bourness him to publish his recently the order diving the figs were consistent of the constitution which the figs were formstanny presembes an opposite way, nords will not sail about there by means of a thorough assimilation which transforms must peneurion in the other sail to beart and about the constraint, and to those officials, those inqui tiory against constraint, and to those officials, those inqui tiory who imageme they are ledping the cause of trath, it exclaims "Leave to God what belongs to Gottly. This was also the constraint, and the constraint of the co

An Counter se upintum.

The Court and the canons of St. John, having failed to oblam may confession from Bandichon, re-ohed to call a writness before them who, they thought, must cen it him. At their request, the Birliop of Genera, who was their at Cham-

* 815. da Procès inquantionnel pp. 260-262. 815. du I rocès inquantionnel, 1p. 803, 304. bery, desired father Cantelier, superior of the Franciscan convent, to proceed to Lyons and give evidence against the prisoner. On the 18th of July the mouk appeared before the Court, and declared that "he had preached daily at Geneva all through Lent, doing the best he could; that he had known Baudichon, notoriously reputed as a favorer of the Lutheran sect, and one Farellus, a very bad man, who preached that heresy, and others more execrable still, of which he was the inventor; that one day, being muable to obtain a license for Farellus to preach, Bandichon came up with his accomplices; that, in the presence of a very great multitude of people, he declared he would have Farellus preach; that thereupon some of his party went and rang the bell three different times, and that in the same monastery where he, Contelier, had preached in the morning, the said Farellus preached publicly, according to his accursed doctrine, which he continued to do all through Lent, wearing a secular dress.' Then, speaking of the visit made him by Maisonnenve and Farel, the father superior continued: 'They asserted that the pope is the beast of the apocalypse, and that the holy see is not apostolical but diabolical; . . . and Baudichon was so transported with rage and anger, that he would have set the monastery on fire."

De la Maisonneuve was then brought in. The two great adversaries met face to face and kept their eyes fixed on each other. The energetic hugnenot, speaking with calmness, almost with disdain, said: 'I know that witness; he is a bad man. . . . He preached several heresies at Geneva, and excited much disturbance among the people.'—'Heresies!' exclaimed the astonished judges. 'What heresies?' An heretical father superior! that was strange indeed!—'If I was at Geneva,' answered the accused, 'I would tell you, but here I shall say no more.'†

At the same time the erafty monk had with him a weapon which, he thought, must infallibly procure Baudichon's

^{*} MS. du Procès inquisitionnel, pp. 324-327.

[†] MS. du Procès inquisitionnel, pp. 335-338.

the honor of burning the Generan Genera and the primate of France, each wished to have But r rivally worthy of Romo existed been een the Bishop of God and the world, and the maintenance of our holy faith' pr pob, to execute puring approach to the contentinent of to death 'I beg you to tran fer him to me' continued the were delivered up unmediataly to the secular arm to be put agrun t such as relapsed, they were not allowed a trial, and rantage of it. The law threatened very severe pendines some conversation of this sort with the bi hop, who took adpos ible that De la Maisonneuve may formerly bave bad threatened him with the stake in ca.e of relapse. It is bosom agranst no one, I was content to pardon lum, but claudat, continued La Brume, 'as the Church souts her nould not go astray again 'Cum nemmi gremum ecclesia had done penance, and promised him, his bishop, that he I utheran heresy (this was five or six years bach), that he friend, that Merconneuve had already been convicted of the Court. The bishop informed his 'good brothers and him with all the rigor of justice. Conteller handed it to praying them to send the culprit to him, or at least, to treat prince, had given him a seakd letter addressed to the judges, Pierre de la Baume, in his quality of bishop and

The struggle was natural. The affair lind all the more unportuned in the eyes of the bishops and priests in an unit and unportuned in the eyes of the bishops and priests in an inter opinion of Luther and of Fard. He was a topmony not interest the presumed to reform the Church The elergy believed that the interestion of the hiry was the most natural opinion as changing, as the undertained become entitle the objects of the area of the condition of the condition of the condition of the condition of the same entitle of the same entitle of the condition of the condi

MS du I roces inquisitionnel, pp. 345-319

in the Church was inndmissible. This perversion of the primitive order was pointed out by the reformers: in their eyes the despotism of priests was still more revolting than the despotism of kings. A man might, they thought, give up to another man his house, his fields, his earthly existence; but to give up to him his soul, his eternal existence, . . . impossible! One of the forces of protestantism was the influence of the laity; one of the weaknesses of Roman-eatholicism was their exclusion from the direction of religions interests.

The Bishop of Geneva thought that, by putting that powerful layman, Maisonneuve, to death, he was dealing the Reformation a heavy blow. The officials of the archbishopprimate of France thought the same. There was no doubt what would be the fate of the proud Bandichon: it was only a question whether the flames of his funeral pile should be kindled at Lyons or Chambery. The judges consequently asked him if he desired to be sent to Chambéry to be tried by the Bishop of Geneva; and the prisoner declared that he preferred remaining in the kingdom of France. la Baume gave way, but insisted that the Court should make haste and punish such a turbulent man. 'Chastise him,' said the bishop, 'according to the good pleasure of the king, who has shown in his letters that he is quite inclined that way. Nay, more, you will do a very meritorious work before God.' The Court accordingly began their preparations for offering up the sacrifice. *

The magistrates of Geneva had not remained inactive. On the 23d of June the syndics and council of the city wrote three letters: one to the king's lieutenant, another to the burgesses of Lyons, and a third to Diesbach and Schoener, ambassadors of Berne at the Court of Francis I., declaring they thought it 'very strange that Messieurs of Lyons should wish to give the law to Geneva.'† The vicarsgeneral were not much alarmed: they hoped that the inter-

^{*} MS. du Procès inquisitionnel, p. 338.

[†] Registres du Conseil des 10 et 23 Juin et 7 Juillet, 1534.

ROOK VIL.

his own country Still they judged it prudent to make chon de la Maisonneuve to be tried for acts committed in vention of Francis I would be lumited to forbidding Baudiiquit, we adure you to answer concerning your faith under enminons * . Haudichon do la Maisonneuve, said the pres The Court now resorted to its final, solemn, and triple morrow . Ho declared he could not do it without necess to own hand whaterer you please, and no will hear you towrite, they told hun, 'wo permit you to set down with your burnt. Occe more they refused him a counsel. If you can mere table talk was not sufficient to cause a man to be Court would not consent they no doubt understood that ton the rights of his people and of their magistrator mem of flowers beared that he desired merely to manndiately concerning any oftence bo was accused of committing however, that ho was ready to enter into explanations immeanswer so that every one would be entished. Ho declared, will be If I were before the syndics of Genery I should Christian?' he replied 'You are not my judges, and never silence At last when the president added 'Are you a Thrice the same question was put, thrice there was the same pain of excommunication. The Genevan was silent beresies which at present swarm so greatly, and as such he great abettor, defender, and protector of the beretics and noned in the indictment, is by us pronounced bereitesl, a penul munife tly convicted of the crimes and offences men ber onnge rose und eard 'Baudichon de la Maisonneure, next day, the 18th of July, he was taken before hun to the care of the archbehops procurator general, and the The inquiry n is over, De la M isconneuro was returned awered, that the proceedings must be well known to hun. ? the minutes of the proceedings, to which the Court ant 315, du l rocca inquis t onnel, pp 539-343 Eriday, 17th July, 1685 is remitted to the ecculur arm !

t spig ble gra-ne

They were in haste to finish. There was a rumor that the king would deliver the prisoner: they must, therefore, hurry on the sentence and execution. On the 28th of July the Court held its last sitting. Two inquisitors were on the bench, and the final sentence was pronounced:

- 'Baudichon de la Maisonneuve,' said the Court, 'you have been fully convicted of having affirmed at Geneva and elsewhere many heretical propositions of the Lutheran or Œcolampadian faction;
- "Of having been the chief promoter and defender of that sect;
- 'Of having protected the impure Farel and other persons, propagators of that perverse doctrine;
- 'Of having refused to answer in our presence concerning your faith;
- 'We therefore declare you to be heretical, and the chief fautor and defender of heresy and heretics; *
- 'Consequently we deliver you over as such to the secular arm.'

This was the formula employed by the ecclesiastical tribunals in pronouncing the capital sentence. De la Maisonneuve appealed to the king, to the legate, to any proper authority, and was led back to prison.

The Church, having a horror of blood, delivered Baudichon to the civil magistrates that they might take the life of that high-minded man: the captain of the Lutherans was condemned to death.† For a long while people at Geneva, Lyons, and elsewhere, had been every day expecting that he would be burnt.‡ Now there could no longer be any doubt about his fate: the sentence was lawfully pronounced. The priests triumphed, and the evangelicals awaited a great sorrow.

^{* &#}x27;Hæreticæ pravitates et hæreticorum maximum desensorem et sactorem.'— The sentence is in Latin in the MS. du Procès inquisitionnel, pp. 431-435.

[†] See the letter of Francis I. to the Council of Geneva in the archives of that city.

[‡] Froment, Gestes de Genève, p. 242.

suffered that great fall, two or three meanices may be which the Church of Romo during the sixteenth century the gulf so near, that, besides the thou ands of erses in have been always drawing it. The ground is so slippery, Peter, and the e who call themselves Peter's succes ors limids Put up thy sword into the sheath, said Acsus to grasp it, easily becomes insensate and ruthless in her convictions only The sword, when religion determines to constraint, and can be propagated and received by moral religion, being in its nature spiritual, has uothing to do with alone belongs the dominion over conscience, to forget that fault -- is to put them elves in the place of God, to whom configure The fault of such judges - and it is a great law to borrew the secular sword to purify the Church from if it is affect with the civil power, makes it a virtue and a combat the errors which destroy souls (as it believes); and, truth of its degrees considers it to he its right and duly to easily admit of explanation A religion convinced of the deeds of the persecutors in the sixteenth century, they them, for they know not what they do Atrocous rs are the uttered upon the cross might be justly applied Forgice upright and perhaps henevolent men, to whom the words to form so severe a judgment of all. Some of them were were malignant functics among them, but it nould be unjust I rance - all of them thresting for blood? No doubt there eral the canons of St John, the archbishop-primate of influenced by cruelty and hatred? Were the vicars-genrshed on them for their faith. Were the persecutors always Maisonneuve, but not freer or more courageous, had per-Germany, and elsewhere, and Christians more earnest thun yrand parming bifes pad spready been erected in Erance, quoted in which even prote tants have stambled.

Three cannites have corrected such lamentable aberratined, we no longer evect scalleds, but tribun ils, along-constoned exile will cource redgens convictions. It is that we we do to devivy foreign energy in all their runnifications?

The most effectual remedy would seem to be the repursion of the spiritual and temporal power, the destruction of the links which still unite the ecclesiastical with the civil power. The doctrine which condemns those fanatical murders has long prevailed all over evangelical Christendom; at Rome the acts are tempered, but the principles remain. Modern civilization is waiting for the time when salutary modifications between the Church and the State will take from the former, everywhere and forevermore, the possibility of again grasping the unholy sword which has poured forth such torrents of the most generous blood.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE NIGHT OF JULY THIRTY-FIRST AT GENEVA.

(JULY 1534.)

By imprisoning Maisonneuve, the priests had desired to check the progress of the Gospel, but it had the contrary The courage of the accused and the injustice of the accusers increased the determination of the Genevans. The work of the Reformation was not a work without forethought; it had been long preparing, and advanced step by sep towards the goal by paths which the hand of God had traced for it. The rich harvests which were to cover the shores of Lake Leman and to feed so many hungry souls, were not to spring from the earth in a day; the soil had long been ploughed and dressed, the seed had been sown, and therefore the crop was so abundant. The Reformation was the fruit of a long travail: at one time the secret operations of divine influence, at another, deeds done by men in the light of day, was transforming by slow degrees a somewhat restless but still energetic and generous people doctring from on lugh . elergy, were able to paralyze in Genera the power of the of the populace, nor the sauctunousura proces ions of the cause of Reform neather the grotesque nor unseemly dances the protestants remuned quick. Everything helped the nearly died of fright Animhetruding this act of violence, The startled haly sere uned out, and (says St ter Jeanne) the mud, transpled on it, and disappears I among the crowd taff, struck her violently on the head with it, threw it into her distail, reached mits the room, snutched away the dis dow open on the ground floor and a protestant ligh filling entaged the devotees so much One of them seeing a winladies remained motionless. Gross manilis nould not have splendid cortege defile through the streets the selvet hooded on pur Bute their needles. Vointy did the prie is sing and the -1104 to efferen tieft their Linunds Plieud ebooil 19 elev at through the open unidows the Lutheran dames were seen fore which the procession passed were without hongings, and net of violence but only a silent protest, many houses bethe devout began to file off There was not the least their progress, but, on being reassured, they took courage garub ment gardestr bebastet engrehme them during When the priests and their adherents heard of the they unshut up their houses, but to work as on ordinary days. tians. They determined not to join in the proces ion, or to the enty to receive divioe hooor, revolted evangelical Chriscon certica by a priest, was about to be paraded through their enlightened sentiments. The thought that a wafer, in their opinion founded on serious errors, and shocked - not because of their antiquity, but because they were men of Geneva had no longer nny taste for these feasts were di appointed. The mo t enlightened and honorable some of the e who bad left them, but their expectations catholics hoped by that imposing ceremony to bring back The festival of Corpus Christi was approaching, and the

* Registre du Couse I du 2 Juin, 1-24 -- La sœur Jeanna. Invoise du Chiromese pp. 59,90

An act of a new convert still further increased the murmurs. When Louis Bernard threw off the surplice he returned to civil life: he soon became a member of the Two Hundred, and afterwards of the Executive Conneil. Being an upright man and desirons of leading a Christian life, he married a widow of good family, and Viret blessed their union. The marriage created a great sensation. exclaimed the catholics, 'priests and monks with wives!' 'Yes!' rejoined the reformers, 'you think it strange they should have lawful wives, but you were not surprised when they had unlawful wives, the practice was so general. What foxy consciences are yours! You confess to brashing off the dew with your tail as you crossed the meadows, but not of having stolen the poor man's poultry!' Bernard justified by his conduct the step that he had taken. The men who had been dissolute priests became good fathers,* and society was gainer by the exchange.

But the priests did not think so. Master Jean, the vicar of St. Gervais, a zealous man and noisy talker, having heard of Bernard's marriage, exclaimed from the pulpit: Where is the discipline prescribed by the church, where are the commandments of the pope? Oh, horror! priests marry after they have taken the vow of chastity!' The question of marriage and celibney was discussed before the Council; the priest and Viret, who had given the nuptial benediction, were summoned to the Hôtel-de-ville. The reformer maintained that marriage is honorable to all men. St. Paul, when directing that the minister of the Lord should not have several wives, shows that we must not constrain him to have none at all, and if the apostle insists that he must be a good father, it follows evidently that he should be married. 'Those who issue from the dens of the solitary and idle life ealled monkery or celibacy,' said one of the reformers, 'are like savages; while the government of a household is an apprenticeship for the government of the Church of God.' The vicar supported his

^{*} Froment, Gestes de Genève, pp. 127-129; MS. de Gautier.

t, Al is unguentis. — Registres la Conseil du 24 Juillet, 1934 Hegretres du Conseil des 20 et 24 Juillet, 1534 - 315' de Cautier

Jeanne, Levain du Caleiment p 88 * Reg eire du Conseil du 8 Jum, 1634 - MS de Gautier, In sout

that it must be celebrated with oil, salt, and other rubbish? I evidence of that absolution But where have you read blood that eleanseth us from our sing, and baptism is the out the aid of priests It is faith in the power of Christ's numediately . The Holy Chost, and Farel, can act willwere led into the council chamber, and the discussion began Uarel, Viret, and the vicar were in attendance, they what he did not beheve was more tyranneal than to silence It was not then understood that to command a man to preach breach on the contrary we order him to preach the Gospel' ? blied trankly -- We have not forbidden the vicar to dean to preach as it is for Master Parel! The syndic reretail to eldissimply ar be it that the for Mister satisfied to speak, and now they want to hinder us from dothey said to the council 'Only the other day they were Are the e heretics already giving us the law in Geneva? men, urutated by the defeat of Rome, came to his assistance Council, and the priest was about to yield, when some layderstood in the sixteenth century Earel complained to the The independence of Church and State was not un-sie ibro facto excommunicate. They apon the child to dan o away the wicked one .

They baptize in rooms, in gardens, without blowing descend into the heart by other channels than the pricets? bereines imagine, he exclaimed, 'that the Holy Chost can marriage, than he opened it on that of haptism. ' Do these But they had no sooner shut his mouth on the question of

in conformity with their lordships, instructions.*

out a few excuses and retired, promising to teach in future must syndic The poor dunbfoundered viear stammered else we shall take proceedings against you, said the predered for from the truth ' Do not corrupt the Gospel, or obmon ph pad argumente, ears the 'legister,' and wan. . I know very well that this strange trumpery is of ancient origin. . . . The devil very early began to indulge in heavy jokes, and all these baubles come from him. Let us put aside these pomps and shows that dazzle the eyes of the simple, but brutalize their understanding, and let us celebrate the rite of baptism simply, according to the Gospel form, with fair water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.' The embarrassed vicar quoted the authority of the pope in his defence, and highly extolled the two swords that are in his hand. 'That is an idle allegory,' said the reformer, 'and a sorry jest. . . . There are two powers indeed: one in the Church, the other in the State. The only power in the Church is the Word of Christ, and the only power in the State is the sword.' That distinction gave much pleasure, and the secretary entered it on the minutes. An important transformation was going on: the civil power was lifting its head and beginning to brave that spiritual power which had humbled it for so long. The syndic kindly entreated Farel 'to take it all in good part; but turning with severity towards the vicar, ordered him again 'to preach in accordance with the truth.' 'Do you forbid me to preach any more?' asked the priest, abashed. The syndic answered him a little harshly: 'You are forbidden nothing, except lying.' This marks a new phase of the Reformation in Geneva. The monks who remained faithful to St. Francis were alarmed in their convent at Rive, and said: 'Let us make haste to carry away our altar-ornaments and jewels.' . . . The Council opposed this, and ordered those precious objects to be kept in safe custody.*

While the magistracy of Geneva held back from cathol icism, the partisans of the pope in the surrounding country were preparing to support it. An alarming rumor had been circulating in the city for some days; and the vicar and the reformer had scarcely withdrawn, when several members of the Council expressed their fears. 'The bishop, in con-

^{*} Registres du Conseil des 30 Juin et 24 Juillet, 1534.- MS. de Gautier.

* Regrafres du Conse I des 23 In et ? Inillet, 1534 - br' ment Cestes de day of July was fixed for the execution of the enterprise was desirable to take advantage of his absence, and the last man so generally dreaded, being then in pri-on at Lyons, it offered hum platsonneuve, the captain of the Lutherans, a young Count of Bresse, and a hand ome compen ation was Brume should resign his see in one of the duke a sons, the Cardinal de Tournon It was proposed that Pierre de la to ask the help of Irrace, and to that end applied to the be erger to appland it. Tn meure success, he determined that enthoherty, far from hemr jerlous of his conquest, would and to re establish the papal power in it. He had no doubt Geneva' The duke hoped to become muster of the city, to the most dangerous treason that had yet been amed at ing the prelate by force. Forthwith the plan was arranged and the deretics by making war upon them, and then restor but one means of safety left, and that us, to destroy the city ning after this new word, they told the duke . There is me down' the hereay of Geneva. ' Every one there is run Vorrons, and there arrangements had been made for 'hunt edt do toot edt ta detam ynsteud a rod ynteesm a beyner lukes, and of the lords of Savoy and of Vaud, had ar stimulated the two princes. The most fervid of the maneconcert measures with the duke A Remish camarilla delightful re-idence at Arbms, he had goao to Chambery to lords of Friburg, and quitting not without reluciance, his to an understanding with the Generese opiscopals and the Pierre de la Baume, brying formed a new plot, had come bands and their lives at his disposal. It nas true that was ordered 'to be on the look-out, and many placed their the gentry of the neighborhood? Captain General Phil ppe ont to low the enemy, and are preparing to attack us, with rgainst the city Many of nur fellow-citizens have gone precises Wherever you go, you hear nothing but threats present, a formidable conspiracy was planned against our they said 'At 2 danquet, at which two hundred persons nere cent with the duke, has formed the de ign of inrading us,

Cenere b 103 gueput b 293 - No 90 ft at at

The Councils of Geneva, in great alarm, sent John Lullin and Francis Favre to Berne to ask the advice and assistance of those powerful allies. At the same time they ordered the bells of the Convent of St. Victor and others to be cast into cannon, and directed the captains of the city to take the necessary measures for putting it into a state of defence. And, lastly, wishing to deprive the enemies of Geneva of every pretext, the Council determined to punish those who had 'ill-advisedly broken the images of the convent at Rive;' and declared, that though such images ought to be taken down and destroyed, according to God's law, yet 'those persons' ought not to have done it without order and permission, because it was an act pertaining to the magistracy. In consequence of this, six men, of whom little was known, were imprisoned on the 26th July.

Great was the enthusiasm in Geneva. The citizens were ready to give up everything 'to follow the right path,' and the Reformation still advanced, notwithstanding the great danger with which it was threatened. Some even chose this moment to confess their faith. The last Sunday in July, a few hours before the day when the enemy intended to enter Geneva, a member of the Dominican order, that pillar of the papacy, 'after the bell had bidden the people to the sermon,' appeared before the congregation, took off his monastic dress, went into the pulpit, and then, 'like a madman,' prayed God to have pity on him. He bewailed himself, asked pardon of his listeners for having 'lived so ill in times past, and so monstrously deceived everybody.' 'I have preached indulgences,' he continued, 'I have praised the mass, I have extolled the sacraments and ceremonies of the Church. Now I renounce them all as idle things. I desire to find but one thing - the grace of Christ crucified for me.' After which he preached an heretical sermon.†

These conversions increased the dangers of Geneva, by exciting the wrath of the catholics. Four days after the ^{*} Registres du Conseil des 24, 26 Juin, 17, 26, 27, 28 Juillet, 1534.

[†] La Sœur Jeanne, Levain du Calvinisme, p. 94.

come its slave and never its rival benefit, and Genera, forever bound to Rome, would thus bewhich the bishop had in anticipation confiscated for their the conquerors would share the property of the vanquished, of feudalism and popery Finally to complete their work, were choking, within its walls, the ancient and glorious plants burged of all those seeds of the gospel and therty which Lutherans and put them to death The city would be The prous soldiers of the Church would fall apon the had been waited for long, it would only he the more terrible would begin the executing of the judgment of God if it two fires, would be numble to make any resistance The friends of mdependence and reform, thus caught between shouting 'Long live our prince, mouseigneur of Genera!" would enter, and Genevans and strangers would advance were to be forced by a locksmuth of their party, the troops hes would then leave their bouses, three of the city gates troops to approach. The catholics of Geneva and their alof their houses with lighted torches to summon the foreign their friends Certain episcopals would mount to the roofs To tradgue adt ot amos of stearng adt tol lrange adt ad bluow arms and horse a red fing. The firing of a beavy culverine of the right I du Crest was to go to the Molard with firestealthily, and were hidden in catholic houses In the middle than three hundred foreigners had entered separately and boats pass without firing on them Within the city, more and the tower guard, bribed by ten crowns, would let the of the darkness. One detachment would arrive by the lake tle distance from the city, were to approach it under cover to be carried out. The Savoyard troops, assembling at a littouching confession of the Dominican the projected plot was brolder, was to descend anto the valley of the Leman, with Colored Conference — France — France — France Colored Conference — France — F

On the 29th and 30th July all began to move round the city. On the north, the Murahal of Burgundy, the bishops six thousand men, raised in imperial Burgundy. On the south, the Duke of Savoy had obtained permission of the king of France to enlist in Dauphiny, 'persons experienced in war.' Numerous soldiers — some coming by land, others by water — were expected from Chablais, Faucigny, Gex, and Vaud. A galley and other boats had been fitted out near Thonon, to which place the artillery of Chillon had been removed. Several corps were marching on Geneva. The bishop, who was anything but brave, did not wish to leave Chambéry; but the duke, to encourage him, gave him a body-guard of two hundred well-armed men, and Pierre de la Baume quitted, not without alarm, the capital of Savoy early in the morning of the 30th July, and halted at Léluiset, a village situated about two leagues from Geneva, where he intended to wait in safety the issue of the affair.

The corps nearest to Geneva appeared. Savoyard troops under the command of Mauloz, castellan of Gaillard, reached their station in front of the St. Antoine Gate. Armed men from Chablais advanced along the Thonon road as far as Jargonnant, in front of the Rive gate. Other bands prepared to enter by the gate on the side of Arve and Plainpalais. Barks and boats filled with soldiers arrived in the waters that bathed the city. The army that was to cross the Jura, and other corps, did not appear; but the assembled forces were sufficient for the coup-de-main.*

While these manœuvres were going on without, everything seemed going on well within. The man entrusted with the care of the artillery, and who was called Le Bossu (the Hunchback), had been bribed. In the evening Jean Levrat, 'one of the most active of the traitors,' had prowled about his dwelling, and the keeper, not wishing to be compromised, had handed him through a loophole the keys of the tower of Rive, where the cannons had been stored. Levrat and his accomplices spiked several, and Le Bossu had filled others

^{*} Chron. de Roset.—Registre du Conseil des 17, 28, 31 Juillet, 1534.—Ruchat, iii. p. 325.— Vulliemin, Histoire de la Suisse, xi. p. 89.— Froment, Gestes de Genève, pp. 123-125.

son, De Prato, Jean Levrat, and the Sire de Pesmes, went cretly. Michael Guillet, Thomas Moine, Jacques Malbuisthey could go from one to another and concert matters secatholics. Party walls had been broken through, so that The most lively emotion prevailed in the houses of all the the city, and made iron implements to break down the gates. with hay. The blacksmith had counterfeited the keys of ment been ignorant,† All the citizens upon whom they horrible plot unravelled, of which they had until that moconfronted them with one another, and gradually saw the with the enemy outside. The syndics questioned them, of those who were always ready to make common cause gence to his colleagues, and it was resolved to arrest some The premier-syndic immediately communicated the intellithat undertook to save Geneva. But was there still time? you. It was a fellow-countyman of Farel and Froment ing the bishop left Chambery to make his entrance among already assembled all round you, and very early this mornarmy is marching upon your city; a number of soldiers are Genera and the Go-pel brought to destruction. The duko's am a hearer of the Word of God, and should grieve to see I's and this, 'I am from Dauphiny,' said the man: 'I with the premier-syndic on urgent business. Michael Sept In the early part of the night a stranger desired to speak ing of the 30th they had gone to rest as quietly as usual. did not believe there was any danger, so that in the evenblow that was impending. They knew of the threats, but and the reformed remained in complete ignorance of the Throughout the whole of the 30th of July the Councils to and fro watching that no man shrank back.

* Froment, Gestes de Genere, p 123

"Suontabnuo!

fering from this narrative, do not appear to us to repose upon such solid the Council which were drawn up by Reset's father. Other versions, dil-139; Roset (Gron. MS by m ch xxvu), and the minutes or Register of ed on the testimony of many witnesses Froment, Gestes de Genere, p. t Our account of the manner in which the plot was discovered is found-could rely were called to arms. It was not yet midnight

The episcopals, who had not gone to bed, waited in exeitement for the appointed hour. A great number of canons and priests had assembled in the house of the canon of Brentena, Seigneur of Menthon, belonging to an illustrious family of Savoy. They congratulated one another that the plot had been so well arranged, and nothing in that assembly of ecclesiastics was talked of but torches, banners, and artillery. In a short time, however, one of their party came in, and told them that the hughenots were arming everywhere. The reverend members of the chapter ran to the window, and saw with affright a numerous patrol marching by. The alarm spread; not an episcopal dared venture out: they hid the red flag, the signal for the murder of the huguenots. One hope only remained; the troops round Geneva were amply sufficient to seeme the triumph of the bishop.*

And indeed the number of soldiers round the city was very great. Playing on the word Geneva, gens nova, the leaders had chosen for their watchword this cruel phrase: Nous ferons ici gent nouvelle,† that is to say, they would extirpate the evangelicals from Geneva and replace them by catholic Savoyards. They waited for the appointed signal and turned their eyes to the roofs of the houses from which the torches were to be waved. They fancied that some had been seen, but had soon disappeared. While the anxious officers were asking what was to be done, some of the soldiers noticed a simple-looking boy walking about on the hill, peering innocently about him, but constantly getting nearer to the city gates. He was taken before Mauloz the castellan and M. de Simon, another of the leaders, who asked him what he was doing there at such an hour of the night. The boy, who seemed greatly embarrassed, answered, 'I am looking for the mare I lost.' It was not the case.

Three of the best citizens of Geneva, Jean d'Arlod, au-

^{*} Registre du Conseil du 31 Juillet, 1534. - Chron. MS. de Roset.

^{† &#}x27;Faciemus hic gentem novam.'- Geneva restituta, p. 73. 'We will make a new people here.'

turbed, their hearts quaked. Manloz, who had kept his eyes serzed the soldiers of Charles III their features nere disrotation darkness of the desert Then a paper terror army, the the glaring eye of the tion shining through the brooded over the city, and seemed turned upon the S woy ard spire, which was built on the crest of the hill It thus last the light ceased to move, it halted at the top of the ment watch of the city is stationed in time of danger. At J 68, 12 18 80 . that is where the Pierrel knew Genera, 'the light is ascending the spire of St began to grow uneasy 'Why, can it be so? said those who was something extraordinary about it, and the Savoyards it rose, already it nvertopped the tallest chimneys strange to say, it looked more elevated Higher and higher and was again eclipsed, and every time it came in sight, their eyes The light appeared and disappeared, returned, hailed it with joy, and the two captains could not turn anay A hrilliant light appeared over the city the whole force torches were to be displayed, exchanaed, There is one!' divided hetween the youth and the houses on which the kill me' At that metent Mauloz, whose attention was Savoyards, replied 'Oh' I should be aftaid they would The lad, who was very unwilling to serve as a cout to the see whether the Rive and St. Anione gries are open, tped telt no doubts . Hark yel' they said to him, go and termined to make use of this poor boy, of who e unocence the eastellan, impatient to know the cause of the delay, de to go and see if they could enter DL de Simon and Mauloz under the walls DArlod directed one of the farm servants where they learnt that the Savoyard troops were already they stopped at a farm house a short distance from the city, before the enemy * Pushing rapidly along the by reads, mediately mounted their himses in order to reach the gates evening, bad beard the enterprise talked of, and had im de at La Roche, three or four leagues from Genera, m the ditor, the zealous Literate d Adda, and Pontet, happening to fixed on the threatening apparition, turned in despair towards M. de Simon, who was already moving off, and exclaimed: 'We are discovered: we are betrayed! We shall not enter Geneva to-night. The young messenger, finding that nobody took heed of him, ran off to the farm to tell D'Arlod and his friends what had taken place.†

[•] Pegretre du Conseil en loco

Yet the lion's eye still glared above the eity. 'The sugar-plums are all ready for our supper,' said the men-at-arms.* Every one thought of retiring: Mauloz and Simon gave orders for the retreat. As day was beginning to break, the Genevese look-outs stationed on the tower saw the Savoyards filing off in the direction of Castle Gaillard, with drums beating and colors flying.

The Genevan catholics were in suspense no longer: their enterprise had miscarried. They were stapefied and furious against their allies. One of them, Francis Regis, said with a great oath: 'We are ruined and undone: those gentlemen are not worth a straw. We made the signals, everything was in good order, but the gentry deceived us.'! As for the bishop, he was more frightened than disappointed When the terrible beacon shone out from the temple of St. Pierre's, some men, commissioned to keep him informed of what was going on, had started off full gallop, and reported to him the ominous words of the ferocious Mauloz: 'We are betrayed!' Instantly the poor prelate mounted his horse, and rode hastily away to join the duke.

When the sun rose, not an enemy was to be seen about the eity. The Genevans could not believe their eyes: the events of that memorable night seemed almost miraculous, and they were transported with joy. like men who have been saved from death. All the morning the streets were filled with people; they exchanged glances, they shook hands with each other, many biessed God, some could not beleve that their catholic fellow cutsens were cognizant of the plot. One little incident removed every doubt. As some cutsens for birth was some cutsens being year of the series of the series of the series of the written of the series of the written of the series of the written series of the series of the written of the series of the written can be cannot be supposed the cuty!

^{*} Registre du Conseil du 25 Janvier, 1537. It was not until then that D'Arlod related to the Council of Two Hundred what had happened to him three years before. Chron. MS. de Roset, liv. iii. ch. xxvii.

The soldiers played upon the word dragee — which means small-shot as well as sweetneats.

[†] Déposition de Jacques Maguin. Papiers Galiffe. A. Roget, ii. p. 116.

A man replied with here, It was the Boesi, his wife, and louder, and the cartiery break of monker woman to be series of the written of the write louder than order of mother was the Boesi, his wife, and have a middeling when the because of mother woman with written of the written order of the written of the write louder than over the writer of the contemporary, nho has recorded the words 'It was God higher The citizens remarked to one another, reports a armed at the Reformation for its destruction raised it still catholicism to rise helped it to descend, and every blow oppied many to leave Geneva. Every effort made by catholics to leave the council, the project of a night attack conspiracy with Portier and the Pennets had forced several returned to the city again, says Froment. The bishop's Aurious ways, they left their bouses and escaped, and noter they formed a desperate resolution disguising themselves in syndics or their officers were coming. As no one appeared, at the slightest noise, and fancied every moment that the up its ears to listen for the pursuing huntamen, they started tier, and, afflighted like the hare in its form, which pricks others, knen well that they mented death more than Por de Peames, the two Du Crests, the two Regis, and many Shulking in their houses, Guillet De Prato, Perceiul The leaders of the conspiricy remained, as usual, at liband the locksmith were immediately arrested who brought down the hearts of our enemies, both without

Levrat the keys through the loop hole' Levrat, the Bosen,

* broment Gentes de Centre, p. 125 Registre du Conseil du 31 Juillet. 1554 Chron. M.S. de Roset. and within, so that they could not make use of their strength.' *

Meanwhile Geneva was not at ease. The Marshal of Burgundy and the Governor of Chablais had not appeared; and the enemy might have withdrawn only to wait for these All the citizens were called to powerful reinforcements. arms. 'Throughout that week a strong guard was kept up, and the gates of the city were closed.' As the episcopals had often had recourse to the bells to summon their partisans, 'it was forbidden to ring the church-bells either day or night.' A silence, accompanied with meditation and vigilance, prevailed through the city. The inhabitants were ready to sacrifice their lives, and showed their resolution by a deep earnestness, and not by idle boasts. The preachers would converse with the soldiers, speaking familiarly to them of the good fight, and the soldiers never grew tired of listening to them. 'What a new way of making war,' said many. 'In old times the soldiers used to have dissolute women with them at their posts, but now they have preachers, and instead of debauchery and filthy language, every thing is turned to good.' †

Could such generous zeal save the city from the attacks of Savoy supported by France, Friburg, Burgundy, and the mamelukes? There were men who shook their heads with sorrow and 'lived in fear and despondency.' But 'a friend sticketh closer than a brother.' On the morning after the enterprise, a delegate from Lausanne arrived in Geneva, and although the Duke had given orders that the Estates of Vaud should make common cause with him, the messenger said: 'We are ready, brethren, to send you a hundred arquebusiers if you want them.' Neuchâtel made a similar offer. Berne commissioned Francis Nägeli the treasurer, the banneret Weingarten, and two other citizens, to exhort

^{*} Michel Roset, MS. Froment, Gestes de Genève, pp. 123-125. Registre du Conseil du 7 Août, 1534.

[†] La sœur Jeanne, Levain du Calvinisme, p. 92. Froment, Gestes de Genève, p. 126. MS de Gautier.

the Duke and Marshal of Burgundy to desist from hostilities

The Swiss cantons, assembled at Baden, forwarded a sum-

one example this oppo ition of the papers and feadabits to phenomenon of which history presents, however, more than were niways on the look-out for travellers. It was a strange without the refugees at Peney heing informed of it, they all the nens No Generan entizen could start for Lyons steep chiffs which line the banks of the river, and told them the city, held secret interviews with them at the foot of the ally on the plett. Their wives and children, left behind in Rhone, nhence they kept the Genevese population continu number in the castle of Pency, on the right bank of the Some took refuge on the left shore of the lake, a greater to get out of the city, stealing away cautiously by night. with them all they could carry, and used various stratagems depart to swell the ranks of the mamelukes They took the city, it was, therefore, matural that the families should Even the friends of the Genevese franchises began to leave leaders had escaped at first now the fight became general their enterprise had unrearrised, their cause was lost. The The partisans of the pope and of the bishop saw that as lar message to Charles III

ing hogged if he returned a year later, however, he was coward was braished from the city for life, under pain of behave the fever he shook, undeed, but it was with fear The his chamber and found him hidden in bed, pretending to sent some of his neighbors, however, forced their way into -da eav od yrs olive eid obed arm biant a emir of enoxitio sped their blood for her One night when the drum called Leep willing her walls none but those who were ready to formers masters of the situation Genera was resolved to of the clergy, whose support they were, and made the re-The fight of the cpiecopalian lasty destroyed the power

" ogsbargend otat harty degenerating into brigandage"

ness to lway and the libons still to be seen a kin years ago near baugny, between the Lyons and tra # 19eE stac on 30 Septembre 1924 The runs of the castle of Pency were indulgently readmitted, 'because it is not given to every man to have the courage of a Cæsar,' says the 'Register'; but he was always looked upon as an alien. Courage was at that time one of the qualifications necessary for Genevese citizenship.*

While the mamelukes were indulging in highway robbery without the city, the weaker members of the episcopal party who still remained within it were living in fear. Their persons, their worship, their convents were respected: not a hair of their heads was touched; but they trembled lest the outrages of the refugees at Peney should excite the huguenots to take their revenge. The nuns especially were in perpetual alarm. One night, between eleven and twelve o'clock, the sisters of St. Claire were startled from their slumbers by a loud knocking at the door: scared at the noise, they listened with beating hearts. Then other knocks were heard. Faint and trembling, they crept from their beds. The huguenots are surely coming to avenge on them the perfidious night of the 31st of July! 'The heretics,' they whispered one to another, 'have broken down the gates of the convent.' The nuns ascribing guilty intentions to them, ran to the abbess in dismay: 'My dear children,' said. she, 'fight valiantly for the love of God.' They waited, but nobody came.

The youngest of the nuns, who had been at service overnight with the rest of the community, and made drowsy by the long prayers, had fallen into a sound sleep; the undersuperior had locked her in the church without observing her. About eleven o'clock the unlucky sister awoke: she looked round, and could not make out where she was. . . . At last she recognized the chapel; but the darkness, the loneliness, the place itself—all combined to frighten her. She fancied she could see the dead taking advantage of that silent hour to quit their graves and wander through the church. . . . Her limbs refused to move. At length she summoned up courage and rushed to the door. It was looked. In her fright, she gave at a vrolent blow. It was no ne came, she knocked again three times, as loud as she could

^{*} Registres du Conseil des 4, 12, 13 Août, 4 Septembre, 1534: 27 Janvier, 1535.

While this was going on, the abbess prepared to receive the wolves who were about to devour her uncoesnit lambs. She first desired to know it all her flock were present, and to her great arguinsh discovered that one was ame me. Let us another knock louder than all the rest, was heard. Let us to be before God than in the domintor he better for us to be before God than in the domintor he better for us to be before God than in the domintor? They descended the stairs, the abbess put the key into the lock, opened the door and found before her the fock, opened the door and found before her the found man who, pale as death familed away in her feet.

Tile takes that men took plesaure an enventanting, and sometimes even printing about the reformers and the reformed, bout Caivus and Luther in particular, often had no more bout Caivus and Luther in particular, often had no more the designs of the huguenous, which had given the poor guits such a terrible fright, and they were less innocent

CHYPTER XIV

AN HEROIC RESOLUTION AND A HAPPT DLLIVERANCE

(August And Sertenber 1634)

Tire frends of independence and of the Reformation had better grounded unxiences than those of the nurs of Si Caire, they understood that the nitrate had only been ad pourned, and that they must hold themselves ready for see vere struggles. Accordingly, Geneva mustered all her forces. Let those who are abroad return home, said the Council: but alas! two of the most intrepid were in the prisons of the French primate, and about to be sent to the stake. The sentence condemning Baudichon de la Maisonneuve and his friend to death had been pronounced, as we have seen. They had been delivered by the priests to the secular arm, and were about to be executed, when a fresh attempt was made in their behalf.

* La Scort Jeanne, Lernin du Caler un ne pp 97 94

There was a patrician family in Berne, illustrious for its ancient nobility and valor, some of whose members had rendered signal services to France. In the 15th century, Nicholas of Diesbach, the avoyer, allied that puissant republic with Louis XI. against Charles the Bold, and had gained several victories over the Burgundian forces. At Pavia, in 1525, another of the family, John of Diesbach, commanded the Swiss auxiliary troops of France. Stationed on the right wing, at the head of 2,000 Helvetians, at first he drove back the imperialist infantry and cavalry. Francis I. was on the point of gaining the victory; but meanwhile his left wing had been annihilated; in that quarter Suffolk, the heir of the White Rose, the Duke of Lorraine's brother, Nassau, Schomberg, La Tremouille, San Severino, and the veteran La Palisse, fell on the field of battle, and Montmorency was made prisoner. Nevertheless, the Swiss still held their ground manfully, when Alençon, the king's brother-in-law, fleeing shamefully, and carrying after him part of the French men-at-arms, caused Diesbach's soldiers, who were fighting at his side and already shouting victory, to waver. At that moment the lansquenets, commanded by the redoubtable Freundsberg, fell furiously on the Swiss and broke them. The Helvetians, seeing the Frenchmen retiring, believed they were to be sacrificed to the hatred of the Ger-John of Diesbach conjured and threatened them in vain; nothing could stop them. Then the valorous captain rushed forward alone against a battalion of lansquenets and fell dead. Bonnivet, in despair, stretched out his neck to the spears of the enemy, and was Lilled and Francis I who was the last to fight, yielded up his sword with a shad der to Lannoy.

John of Diesbach had married a French lady, Mademot selds de Befügge, to whom hee king had promised a dowry of 10 000 livres, but had afterwards given her bushand, as an quartleint, the lordship of Langes, whitei the latter had be questibed to his wife. But in 1533 Francis I had taken yield the latter had governed the hero of Prens, finding berelf thus departed of her property by the man for whom her husbrind had died, proposed to the near for whom her husbrind had died, republic had commissioned another Diesback, Rodolph, to proceed to the courts of France to eupport the just claims of the republic had commissioned another Diesback, Rodolph, to proceed to the courts of France to eupport the just claims of last station. Rodolph departed on the 12th of January, last station and the first of January, Barting of the first of more importance to General than to Berner I was a Rodolph of Diesbach humself was lingthly effected at the Diesbach humself was lingthly effected in the Team of the particle of the control and the last had been desired in the last and a last and assed his routh there, had subject in the France.

Modolph of Dieshach Imreelf wer highly effecteded in Puniver, Ited studies and from 1907 to 1515 ind inden part in the wars of Louis XII, and from 1907 to 1515 ind inden part in the wars of Louis XII, and honorably distinguished hum at the wars of Louis XII, and honorably distinguished hum self. On this return to Herne, he was one of those who embraced the evangelical faith, and was often called to defend the interests of Geneva and the Reformation While Modolph was in France pleading the electromes of his cousts, and Dieshack tecetred instructions from the loris of Berne on and Dieshack received instructions from the long of them to and a warrior, went to Blois where Frances I was the hold as warrior, went to Blois where Frances I was the hold as warrior, went to Blois where Frances I was then hold as a warrior, went to Blois where Frances I was then hold as warrior, went to Blois where Frances I was then hold a warrior, and counts at the regarded Bruddelon do la Marion two cyangelicals; the regarded Bruddelon do la Marion in corrections of the corrections.

^{*} Navrai re of Pescara and Fremdaderg Hislove de la Sume dy Jean de Muller continued by MM (clouix Blotzhe m 4 J Hottinget

¹ Megratio du Consent de Gendere II Seytember 1534

neuve as his co-burgher and co-religionist, and saw clearly how useful his presence would be in Geneva. But, on the other hand, the eatholic nobles and ultramoutane priests urged the king to suffer the two Genevans to be burnt. How could Francis I., who had recently become the pope's friend, and who had ordered the heretics in his kingdom to be brought to trial *—how could he save the heretics of Geneva? The friends as well as the enemics of the Reformation were in the keenest suspense. Weeks, and even months elapsed, without obtaining a decisive answer from the king.

Geneva was greatly agitated during this long delay; but the absence of the two energetic huguenots did not hinder the work from being pursued with resolution. The magistrates desired to take and execute promptly the supreme measures rendered necessary by the danger of the country. A terrible and inexorable necessity continually rose before their minds. To save Geneva, a great portion of it must be destroyed.

The city was at that time composed of two parts: the city proper and the four suburbs. The suburb of the Temple, or Aigues Vives (Eaux Vives), stood on the left shore of the lake, and took its name from the church of St. John of Rhodes, which stood there.† The suburb of Palais lay to the left, on the picturesque banks of the Rhone; that of St. Leger extended from the city to the bridge thrown over the icy torrent of the Arve; and that of St. Victor, in which the monastery of that name was situated, stretched from Malagnou to Champel. This town beyond the walls not only had as many houses as the one within, but covered a far more extensive surface, and contained over six thousand inhabitants.

On the 23d August the Two Hundred members of the Great Council received a summons, bearing the words: 'In ^{* &#}x27;Faire et perfaire le procès des hérétiques.' — Letter to the Bishop of Paris.

[†] Near the Pré l'Évêque.

suburbs. There were erres and tears here and there, but the city, 'n ent to give orders for the destruction of the dies, accompanied by Aime I evet and five other captains of was urgent - the very same day, after dinner, the four syn tion was agreed to, and without any delay - for the matter enputes than the city, exclaimed the citizens. The resoluedt . are petier to lo-e the band than the arm religious moirves were carried away by patrious enthusiasm they might preserve it. Those who were not touched by brightness, were prepared for the greatest sacrifices so that matton, 12 whose eyes the Gospel had shone with all its Two Hundred did not besitate The friends of the Reforother shelter left them than the vault of hearen. Yet the died, and a great part of the population would have no they had been born, and where those whom they loved had beseeing pomes in apich their childhood had played, where With their own hands the entizens were to destroy the e the proposition What a resolution! what a disaster! the nearest. Many were struck with grief when they heard knock down all the honses, barns, and wall, beginning with himself in them, and that it was necessary unhesitingly to the suburbs were very extensive, the enemy could establish added, that such measures alone were not sufficient, that, as build up some of the gates, and to set a good guard, but derstood what they meant. The premier syndic proposed to conseduent of urgent attars of the city . Every one un-BOOK AIT THE REPORTATION IN EUROPE ₽78

* Registre du Conseil ad denn three of the hishop's castles, and put to the torture. On turning from Lyons, was seized, drugged successively to the 14th of August, Bicherme, a merchant of Geneva, re triffing skirmishes announced more serious combate to the Council ' Be on your guard' Acts of violence and draw nearer The Geneve a ambaseadors at Berne wrole It must be done, for every day the danger appeared to country and their faith

although with trembling hands, upon the alter of their nearly all had formed the resolution to lay their goods, the 25th, Chabot, another citizen, was stopped at the Mont de Sion, taken to the eastle of Peney, and also put to the torture; but the judges, wishing to give a proof of their good nature, added: 'Do not let his bones be broken or his life endangered.' They soon brought in a new prisoner.

There was an embroiderer at Avignon, 'so superstitious in fasting,' that he had sometimes gone several days without eating or drinking. The poor artisan, having received the Gospel, had ceased to attend mass, and had consequently been sent to prison. The churchmen asked him how long it was since he had been present at the sacrifice of the altar. 'Three years,' he replied; 'and with my own will neither myself nor any of my family would ever have gone there.' When they heard him talk in this way, the priests did not dare put him to death, for they thought him mad. Six months afterwards there came a great pestilence; every one fled, and the prison-doors were left open: 'seeing which the pious embroiderer went out.' He thirsted for the Gospel, and knowing that there were great preachers at Geneva, he took the road to that city. His travelling expenses were not great: 'he had been accustomed to go from Avignon to Lyons, more than sixty French leagues, for a sol-de-roi,' says Froment. At last he reached the valley of the Leman, alone and a fugitive, but joyfully anticipating the words of life that he was soon to hear. Suddenly he was surrounded by a troop of horsemen, who asked him roughly: 'Where are you going?' 'To Geneva.' 'What to do?' The embroiderer answered frankly and courteously, as was his custom, 'I am going to hear the Gospel preached; will you not go and hear it also?' 'No, indeed,' answered the men. He began to press them: 'Go, I entreat you,' he said. 'I am surprised at you: you are so near, and I am come expressly all the way from Avignon to hear it. I entreat you to come.' 'March, rascal!' they cried, 'and we will teach you to hear those devils of Geneva.' They took him to Peney, and, on reaching the eastle, said to him: 'We will give you three strappadoes in the name of the three devils whom he related the whole matter , * months, anys Froment, 'with the nuthor of this book, to reached Geneva at last, and was lodged for nearly two taking him for an idiot, they let him go. The poor man could do to him 'He is out of his mind,' they said, and, ansuce don come, apicy he aonig not go for unithing they answered roughly . March hack quickly to the place from with me and hear the Gospel. The indignant Peneysans lore for them, repeated, in a persuasive tone 'Come along he could again looked at his tormentors, and, touched with fellow, all bruised as he was, getting on his legs as well as came one for Froment, and another for Viret. The poor ground 'That is in the mame of Farel, they cried, then of wood, and let him fall suddenly to within the feet of the behind his back, they raised him to the top of a long beam you wished to go and hear preach, Having tied his hands proach of the enemy should be cut down, and on the 13th, that the trees around the walls which might screen the apit should be fortified on the side of the lake, on the 11th, for the defence of the city, on the let of September, that on the 24th, that all absentees should be summoned to return current who should be fed and lodged by the rich in turn, that a certain number of Swiss veteran soldiers should be barns, and walls in the suburbs should be pulled down, and should be demolished, on the 23d, that all the bouses, 18th they ordered that the church and priory of St Victor trons of the Council followed one mother rapidly On the was no time to lose. In the month of August the resolu Such deeds of violence showed the Genevans that there weaker minds were distressed, the more excitable gave way meyorable, and with all us coarer and end realities TI e The calamity then appeared before them as imminent and two days that 1s, by the 15th of September ? that every man should begin to pull down his hou e within to anger In the suburbs there was much clamor 13149 55

Council Registers under the lates mentioned. * Froment, Actes et Gestes Merreilleux de lu Cite de Genere pp 174 1 h. the houses to be levelled to the ground, like those of traitors, and that too by the very hands of the inhabitants! The priests shuddered at the thought that the churches of St. Victor, St. Leger, and of the Knights of Rhodes were to be destroyed. Discontented citizens pointed coolly to the solidity of the condemned edifices, and declared that it would not be possible to pull them down. And, finally, the chiefs of the catholic party, foreseeing that the measures which were to be the salvation of Reform would be the ruin of popery, determined to make a vigorous demonstration against them.

Thirty of the most notable catholies, headed by Anthony Fabri, one of the family of the celebrated Bishop Waldemar, and Philip de la Rive, waited upon the eouneil. Fabri, who had been elected spokesman, was ealm, but by his side stood De Muro (du Mur), who was much excited. 'We demand that the suburbs be left in their present condition, as being beautiful, convenient, and more useful to the city than if they were destroyed.' The council, whom it pained to impose such a sacrifice, reserved the power of compensating the greatest sufferers, but held to their orders. 'I crave permission to leave the city,' said De Muro, 'with eight hundred of my co-burghers, for this demolition is an act of hostility against us.'*

At the very time when certain of the citizens were threatening to leave Geneva, the friends of independence desired all the more to see the return of those who were away. There was one in particular whose decision and courage were appreciated by all. Suddenly, on the 26th of September, the very day when De Muro had used that threatening language, a report circulated through the city that Baudichon de la Maisonneuve and his companion had been set at liberty.

Rodolph of Diesbach and George Scheener had not ceased to implore the king's intervention. Although the prince, who in a few months was to fill the streets of his capital

^{*} Registre du Conseil du 14 Septembre, 1534.

f Regustre du Conseil du 17 Septembre, 1534 Froment, Gestes de Genere, p 244

1613 $ yous pa Houmors on the corresponding passage of the Council Regudu 14 Septembre, 1634.

* Deo dante morana refanationem obinarerant. Registres du Consell Perse § with Bandichon and Collonier, many persons would Bernese gentlemen had arraved at the boatchry of the Tour on the 16th of September, when the news spread that some

There was still so much uneasmees felt about them, that once more within the walls of that ancient city.

from Lyons to Geneva with the two lords of Berne, and nero zeal at the emancipation of their country. They travelled bosed to new dangers, they desired to work with greater ty, Let us remain for a timo in the shade, lest ne be ex-Instead of saylog, when they were restored to liberwith the intent that they should abandon what they bree overs, they knew that if God delivers his servants, it is out so, but they were forced to be patient' ; As for the priswere sorely vexed, and the archbishop of Genera still more canons of St. John were amazed, all the puests of Lyons such an unprecedented act, the officials, inquisitors, and and Janua were given up to the Bernese. At the news of The gates of the preson were opened, De la Maisonneuve til they should be burne, as was the practice in those days't the authorities in whose guard the prisoners were kept 'unletters under his Majesty's seal, which they presented to us. * They started immediately for Lyons, furni-hed with erty, said the ambassadors, God baring given them to edged the protection of God. 'We have obtained their bbto turn from side to side to the helps of this world, acknowl lease of the prisoners The two Bernese, instead of ' tarrying Dieshach's earnest solicitations, Francis I granted the re-The cause of justice traumphed at last Moved by widow, he was not sorry to give the Bernese come other causmuch inclined to restore her estates to John of Diesbrehs to coociliate the freor of the Swiss, and perhaps not being sery sincere compassion for the two heretics, still he de ned nith etrappadoes and burring piles, did not not feel any hardly believe it. God gave the Genevans more than they hoped for. When friends who have been supposed lost are found again, those who had sorrowed over their bereavement run to meet them, and feel an inexpressible satisfaction as they look at them. So it happened at Geneva when the two prisoners returned. There was great joy in the city: many gave thanks to God that 'the violent course of the wolves who would have devoured the best sheep of the flock had been frustrated, and praised the King of France because he valued the arquebuses of the Swiss more than the paternosters of the priests.

Desirous of showing the ambassadors a mark of respectful gratitude, the four syndies and the councillors, with their ushers and serjeants, proceeded on the 17th of September to the Tour Perse * to hold an official sitting, at which the transfer of the prisoners was to be made. The chief magistrates of the republic having taken their seats in one of the large rooms, according to the usual order, Rodolph of Diesbach and G. Scheener entered, accompanied by the captives. Those noble gentlemen explained that they had come from Lyons and the court of France; that with God's aid they had obtained the release of the two Genevans; that, according to rule, they ought to deliver the prisoners into the hands of the magnificent lords of Berne, to whose intervention their deliverance was due; † that they yielded, however, to the wishes of Baudichon and Collonier, who preferred to remain in the city of Geneva; I and that they only wanted a guarantee that the Council would be willing to produce them before Messieurs of Berne, whenever the latter demanded them.§ The Genevese magistrates thanked the lords of Berne, and gave the required guarantee in writing.

^{* &#}x27;In domo turris Perse.' Registre du Conseil du 17 Septembre, 1534.

[†] Illos debere magnificis Dominis Bernatibus præsentari.'--Ibid.

^{‡ &#}x27;Dicti Baudichon et Collonier optant potius in hac civitate expectare, quod alibi.'— Ibid.

⁴ Petunt cautionem de repræsentando eosdem.'- Ibid.

^{| &#}x27;Super quo factum remersiationibus.'- Ibid.

At last De la Massoneuve was free be could return to bar wife and children, and converse unth his freeds The wife were never tired of bastening to him the particulars of his imprisonment, his examinations, and his dangers possessed the brehest interest for them Troment especially, who was fond of a goostp, a asked him many questions will was found to his order of the past of the days of

A letter from Frances 1 completed this quisodes in the history of the Referenceness. That prince wrote to the gradies at Geneva — ‡ cost him one thousand and fifty crowns of the sun ?

type our very dear and good friends the lords of Ge pray you right affectionately by these presents, that, shown 8 for which he is about to be brought to trial, ne desire to faith of the Church, which did not seem good to you, and beld certain language and dograratized things touch in I be bity by name, of the order of Preaching Franc, for having rained in prison in your city a monk our subject, Guy Lur-For this cause, having been advertised that you have debettect confidence that you are willing to do the like for usrespect as in all others that may be possible to us, liniting to gratify you and the said lords of Berne, 25 well in this This we were right willing to do, for the affection ne have sequence, that therefore they had been condemned to death. dom used words respecting the faith, such and of such con and sent back certain prisoners who had, in this our king lords of the city and canton of Berne, we have restored dear and great friends, confederates, allies, and gossps, the carnest prayer and request, and also at that of our rery 'Very dear and good friends - You know how, at your honnet, Leures Françaises de Culrin il p 515 † Fronceat Gestes de Genere p 244 † Archives of Genera di 1954, yent 1534

towards us reciprocal pleasure, you would immediately release the said Furbity our subject, without further proceedings against him for the reasons aforesaid. By so doing you will please us very agreeably. Praying the Creator to guard you, our very dear and good friends, in his most holy keeping. Written at Blois the xxist day of September, one thousand v hundred xxxiiij.

'FRANÇOYS.

BRETON.

Francis I. said: I send you back two prisoners, return me one. That seemed just and natural, yet the petty republic did not yield to the demand of the puissant king of France. The Council desired to follow conscientiously the legal course, and the rules of diplomacy. They found that the two cases were not identical; and as the Dominican had been imprisoned at the instance of the lords of Berne, it was agreed to ask their opinion first. The favor of the house of Valois could not make the ungistrates of Geneva yield, even after the extraordinary boon they had just received: they desired, above all things, to follow the principles admitted in polities, and act justly towards the Bernese. Furbity was set at liberty at the beginning of 1536.

To have imprisoned the Dominican at all for preaching was a fault, and to keep him in prison was another; but in each case the fault was that of the age. With this reserve, we may pay to the courage of the weak the honor that is due to them. It is a noble thing in small states to hold firm to their principles in the presence of powerful empires, when they do so without presumption. And not only is it noble, it is salutary also, and invests them with a moral force which guarantees their existence. The petty republics of Switzerland and Geneva in particular have given more signal examples than that which has just been recorded.

CHAPTER XV.

THE SUBDIES OF GENEVA ARE DENOLISHED AND THE

(6881 YRAUGAL OF $631 HARMATISS)

even during the day, they were seen learing the monastery everything that was of any value, at night, and sometimes pillage the monastery, they tore down and carried anny entrable greediness. The monks and their mistresses beg in to of debauchery than the reproduces exhibited the most in ual orgies No sooner was there a talk of destroying that nest suburbs, but now the convent was the scene of their continthe habit of frequenting certain houses of ill fame in their a sly of scandals and disorders The frants had been in off every kind of restraint, and the monastery had become prior had been prisoner at Chillon, the monks had shaken ph the thought of its antiquity. Ever since Bonisard the that huilding, except such as might have been drawn down post.* There were no tears shed over the destruction of easily be occupied by the enemy's army as an advanced St. Victor, which, as it stood at the gate of the city, might first walls destined to fall were those of the monastery of ace one half of the city in order to savo the other. The could not but grve a fresh impetus to the resolution to each remarkable. The return of these two energenc citizens the deadliest blows were aimed at it The coincidence was una mas restored to his country at the very moment when mojesp the suburbs was given. The captain of the Luther-Geneva the day after that on which the final order to de-Вальтенои ве да Максоливиче анд Јави те-свистед with bundles, and hiding their plunder in the adjoining houses. The priory was thus not only emptied, but almost stripped to the bare walls.* What an ignoble fall was that of these pretended religious orders! Notwithstanding their robbery, the Council assigned the monks a residence in the city, and even a chapel, which was more than they deserved.

[#] It was subusted nearly on the spot where the Russian church now stands

Then every man put his hand to the work. All was life and animation on those beautiful heights whence the eye takes in the lake, the Alps, the Jura, and the valley lying between them. First, the church was pulled down, and then the priory, and nothing was left but rubbish which encumbered the ground. That building, the most ancient in Geneva, was founded at the beginning of the sixth century by Queen Sedeleuba, sister of Queen Clotilda, in memory of the victories of her brother-in-law, Clovis; † - that temple where the body of St. Victor had been deposited during the night, and which (as it was said) a light from heaven pointed out to strangers, - that sanctuary to which the great ones of the earth had gone as pilgrims, was now an undistinguishable ruin. That monument, erected to commemorate the triumph of orthodoxy defended by Clovis over Arianism professed by Gondebald, crumbled to the ground, after lasting more than a thousand years, in the midst of the libertinism of its monks. A crown had been placed on the cradle of St. Victor - a rod should have been placed upon its ruins.

Yet things that have been great in the eyes of men do not always end like those that have been vulgar. One day a strange report, set afloat by the monks and nuns, circulated through the city. During the night, voices, groans, and lamentations had been heard among the ruins of St. Victor. The wind, when it blows strong over those heights, often resembles the human voice. The devotees listened: again the plaintive tones were heard, and aginted them. 'Ah!' hing exclaimed, 'ti is the dead growning, and not without reason, because their repose has been disturbed.' The crowd increased, and ere long 'the ghosts were plainly immening, not only hy night, but by day.' If the dead immented over the cluricy, whose monks had been its disgric more over the cluricy, whose monks had been its disgrice instead of its giory.

^{*} Registre du Conseil du 18 Août, 1534. The expression in the Register is much more energetic.

^{† &#}x27;Ecclesia quam Sedeleuba regina in suburbano Genevensi construxerat.' — Fredegarius, Chron. cap. xxii. La sœur Jeanne, Levain du Calvinisme, p. 94.

poet gave utterance to their thoughts in these lines: -tique and religious character to the pleasing picture. A ple of the Crusaders, whose Gothic walls imparted an auovershadowed by majestic trees, the fountains and the temthem, the smiling meadows watered by running streams and regretted their beautiful houses, the pleasant gardens round imprisonment. If the poor lamented their hovels, the rich the syndics in a fit of passion, was sentenced to three days' to the redels. Magdalen Picot, a widow, having insulted trates showed kindness to the wretched, they were inflexible wheat, and promised to pay his rent. But if the magishome demolished; the Council gave him a measure of infirm old man, burst into tears when he saw his wretched nier. 'And where shall I go myself?' A poor mason, an where shelter my wife and children?' said Jean Montagwas to become of them. 'Where shall I store my goods, their labors, sat down on the ruins to rest, they asked what pulled down one by one. When the citizens, wearted by After the priory, the houses nearest to the city were

Urbe fuere milis majora suburbia quondam, Templia et domibus mec speciosa minua, Quinetiam irriguis pratis, bortis et antœnis; Pascebant ceulos hice animosque magia *

Amid such lamentations, all good citizens and zealous evangebenis remained firm; but De Muro with a great we' Great surface at one arrounded the city, not less beautiful with character and formers them arrounded the city, not less beautiful

 Creat survivolus a cose times arrounded the city, not less seames with churches and locaces them with vell-watered meadows and pleasand gradeon; which desired the eyes and the heart still more. The locations that our activact is taken are desired; an amounterpt. He secribes them to an accompose writer who had seen the suburbs. number of catholics quitted Geneva, and passed over to the enemy's camp. Henceforward they were to fight no longer against the Reformation with secret conspiracies; they would attack it in open war: aperto bello patriam oppugnaturi.*

At the same time that the houses were demolished, ramparts were built. Tribalet, captain of Berne, and one of the envoys from that republic, a man of experience, quick and eompassionate at the same time, directed the construction of the earthworks and masoury intended to fortify the city. Towards the end of September, he began to plot out the lines in a garden adjoining the convent of St. Claire. and poor, great and small, wheeled their barrows filled with earth and stones. When the work was done, Tribolet decided that it must be continued into the next garden, that of the nuns; and on the 30th of September, as early as four in the morning, they were politely requested to remove from the garden everything they wished to keep. Sorely distressed at this terrible message, they began to call upon God through the intercession of the Virgin and the saints. 'We are secluded from the world for the love of God,' said the abbess to the Bernese captain; 'forbear from breaking into our holy eloister.' Tribolet explained to her that the safety of the city required it, and added that he would do his work, 'whether they liked it or not.' Thereupon the frightened sisters threw open the convent, and running into the church, fell prostrate to the cartle, weeping bitterly When the eaptain opened the door, and saw the poor women stretched on the pavement, he said kindly to them: 'Do not be afraid, we shall do you no harm.' The sisters were much surprised to find a heretic could be so good-natured.

Meanwhile the work of destruction continued, and as the materials were employed to build the fortification and repair

^{*} Registre du Conseil des 11, 14, 16, et 19 Septembre, 1534. Gautier, MS. La sœur Jeanne, Levain du Calvinisme, pp. 97, 98. MS. de Turrettini; Berne, Hist. Helvet.

[†] Registre du Conseil des 21, 25 Septembre, 1534. La sœur Jeanne, Levain du Calvinisme, pp. 97-100.

ment to I cuck and drank with the episcopal fugures there that was all 'As for me, said the son, 'I confess that I press-house? They had taken a glass of wine together and called on him Did any one ever refuse a visit prud in the ing the grapes, Micod de Prato and other Peneys ms hal The father said that, while he was in the presshouse presin the easile of Pener, which was hill a league distant the Council on a charge of communicating with the people Percy for the vintage, were on their return summoned before notary and his son Pierre), having gone to their estate at nards the end of September, the two Gallatins John the brightnds, and preparing perpetual troubles for you' Ioof Savoy, said letters from Berne, '1s collecting an army of by the news which reached them from without . The Duke The activity of the Genevese was constantly stimulated curite of St. Leger up one, and he who had a lost of bread shared it with ins brother. Syndro Duvidard was empowered to lodge provinced a fact of the state of the state

But what was to be done with the str thousand cutzens aspelled from their homes? Were they to be left to wrater about, exposed to the robbers of the neighborhood? There would have been room for a great portion of them in the convents, but those buildings were kept eloed. On the other hand, the bouses of the buguencies were thrown open other hand, the bouses of the huguencies we intrough dobts through long wars, their trade was runned and dient fields lad make fore the property of the prope believe thing , , the rest time have perished, Etiam

they told me that ere long we should have a stout war; that it would not be a little one like De Mauloz' night attack on the 31st of July; that they would come in great force, and that I should do well to leave the city. When I returned (continued Pierre) I reported it all to my captain.' The two Gallatins were immediately discharged without any remark.*

The first enemy which the bishop loosed against his flock was famine: he gave orders to intercept the provisions all round the city. The market-place was deserted, the stores in the houses were gradually exhausted, and the episcopals flattered themselves that before long none but hungry plantoms would be seen in Geneva, instead of valiant citizens. Oh, insensate shepherd! he robs even his sheep of their food, when he should feed them, said one who was among the number confined within the city walls. Unhappy bishop! unhappy Geneva! †

As if starvation was not enough, the unnatural pastor surrounded Geneva with a circle of iron. His castle of Jussy to the east, at the foot of the Voirons; that of Peney to the west, on the banks of the Rhone; the Duke's castle of Galliad to the south-west, on the heights overlooking the Arve; and to the north on the lake, the village of Versoix, at that time well defended: all these fortresses, filled with mamelukes and soldiers, hemmed in the city, and left no issue but by the lake. 'In this way no one can leave Geneva,' they said, 'except at the risk of his life.' The bishop followed the example given by dispossessed princes—nay, even by ecclesiastical authorities, and connived more or less at the brigands. Many gentlemen of those districts, returning with delight to a trade their fathers had formerly practised, kept watch in their eyries for the little merchant caravans, ^{*} Registre du Conseil du 21 Septembre, 1534. The Gallatin family, after serving this republic, furnished devoted citizens to the United States. Abraham Albert Alphonse Gallatin, who emigrated to America at the end of the eighteenth century, became Secretary of State.

[†] Froment, Gestes de Genève, p. 115. Registre du Conseil, 29 Septembre, 1534.

to pounce upon them One day some devout catholics of BOOK 117 THE REPORMATION IN LUBOUE

there put to death by order of a cathohe tribunal ? and sensual naid boar of the Jura nas taken to Dole, and of grang then alms, and then maitreated them. The fleres graciously invited them to enter his mansion under pretence concerned Having fallen in with some nuns one day, he He showed no preference, honever, so far as religion was nith him for his cruelty, the seigneur killed him on the spot ments,* and when the judge of the castle remonstrated manner a poor tradesman who had printed some New Testa cutting off the errs of others' DAvanchi treated in this nocks like a wild beast, tearing out the eyes of some, and high road, and when travellers appeared, spring from the t few savige mercenance, he would he in ambush near the conningest and cruellest man ever known' Accompanied by of robbers - belonging to the Seigneur of Aranchi, the the Fort de l'Ecluse was satuated a castle — a thorough den mnles, were stripped by these rough episcopils. Beyond Value, on their way to France with a long file of well laden the scale, the symbol of supreme authority, to be taken from in their toils ' by friuds and sparces' ‡ the Council forbide that episcopal erew, who had so often caught the Geneve o friends felt in immense relief. At last they were free from morning, De la Marsonneure, Leret, Salomon, and their off in beords tog tilgift gift for abroad in the nithout prelate, but also nithout civil judges or courts of officers escaped stealthly and the city nas left not only et. In the night of the 24th of September the chiecol " cit, court, judges, and all other officers should proceed thath at the foot of the Jura, and grve instructions ' that his counpal see to be transferred from Genera to the toun of Gex, The bishop now took another step he ordered the cpi200-

t y at transce et p pees.

sort du 25 Septembre 1554 Hoset Mb. Frome t, bestes de Ge tère pp 117, 118 121, 174 Registre du Con Berne p 7 * Procès Inquisitions et de Band chon de la Maisonneure 315 de

Geneva.* The prince bishop assembled at Gex a great number of priests from the surrounding districts. 'We must erush that Lutheran seet,' he told them, 'by war or otherwise. It is not enough to remain entrenched in our eamp, we must force the enemy in theirs.'

Pierre de la Baume launched his thunderbolts at last. In every parish of the Chablais, Faucigny, Gex, and Bugey, in every abbey, priory, and convent, the great excommunication was pronounced in his name, not only against the conneils and citizens of Geneva, but against all who should hear the preachers or talk with them, and even against any persons who should enter the city for any purpose whatsoever. Hereafter, the superstitious rural population looked upon Geneva as a place inhabited by devils. Some men of Thonon, more curious than the rest, ventured to pay it a visit, and on their return declared 'that the preachers were really men and not demons.' These rash individuals were arrested and taken to Gex, where the bishop sent them to prison; † and after that time no one dared go to Geneva.

The friends of the Reformation were not discouraged by these hostile acts. 'By Christmas at the latest,' they said, 'all the churches will be empty, and the whole city of one faith.' † 'It is all for the best,' added many. 'Once upon a time the bishops usurped the franchises of the city; now they return them to us and go away. Well, then, let us do without bishops, and govern ourselves.' The Council did not think fit to proceed so quickly, and merely resolved 'that everything should be written down which the bishop had done against the city, by way of precaution against him.' § When the canons, the representatives of the prelate, assembled for their usual monthly meeting, || the syndics and council appeared before them: 'Forsaken by our bishop, who is

^{*} Froment, Gestes de Genève, p. 115. Registre du Conseil du 25 Septembre, 1534. Gautier MS.

[†] Froment, Gestes, p. 116.

[†] La sœur de Sainte Claire, Levain du Calvinisme, p. 97.

[§] Registre du 18 Septembre, 1534.

[&]quot; Die calendæ suæ.' - Registre du Conseil du 1er Octobre, 1534.

OFR

THE REPORTATION IN EUROPE,

exciting eruel soldiers against his flock, what shall we do,

The canous having answered in a dilatory manner, the who have deserted their office. . the necessary functionaries for the city, in the place of those you to recognise the fact, and to elect, as in your privilege, reverend sirs?' they asked. 'The see is vacant: we pray that their bishop had deprived them of their franchises and syndics and council entered an appeal at Rome, complaining revolutionary policy. I On the 7th of October, 1584, the midst of a revolution, have neither accepted nor adopted a ceeded, remarks an historian, are those who, in the tery by this means attained their end. The men who have suc vigor. That petty people followed the path of legality, and forged decretals of the pseudo Isidore, twere then in full pontiff as bead of the catholic world, partly founded on the pape. It was a strange step, but appeals to the Roman tween them and the bishap. The Genevese appealed to the solved to apply to the only nuthority that could decide becouncils, who were always rigid observers of precedent, reguenots, ' be has an ass's bend and a fox's tail. The Ber. of Geneva of his goodness. 'We know him, said the huthe prince's courteous manners, tried to convince the people who had been sent to him, and these men, enraptured with He succeeded in gaining over some Bernese ambassadors But as the pope laid down the crosier the duke took it up. n as returned, which greatly delighted the erangelicals.5 ligations. It was Rome who broke the bond: no answer

The prince of the Vatican was called upon to fulfil his objurisdiction. It was not a matter of religion, but of policy.

Roset, hy un ch xxix. * Regratre du Conseil du 1er Octobre 1531. 31S, de Gautier. 31S de uese confinned: 'Everything will be forgiven, but on con-

sancim redi reservata casa liquet." -- Canon 12. Tpiscoporum judicia et cunctorum majorum negoua causarum eidem

dition that you send away these new preachers; that you permit such preachings no longer; that the bishop be restored to his former estate, and finally that you live in the faith of our holy mother, the Church.'* The Genevans could hardly believe their ears. The Little and the Great Council having sent for the ambassadors of Berne, told them plainly and curtly: 'You ask us to abandon our liberties and the Gospel of Jesus Christ. We would sooner renounce father and mother, wife and children, we would sooner lose our goods and our life! Tell the duke we will set fire to the four corners of the city, before we dismiss the preachers who announce the Word of God. . . . Nevertheless, they offer to endure death, if it can be shown by Scripture that they are wrong.' The men of Berne were greatly astonished at such a reply.†

The duke was still more astonished; the measure was full, the insolence of that handful of friends to the evangelical doctrine must be severely punished. 'Seeing this, the duke and all his following (sequelle), more inflamed than ever with anger against Geneva, consulted together to make war upon it.' From every quarter the heads of the clergy (and Bishop du Bellay in particular) conjured him 'to support the authority of the holy faith in the city of Geneva.' ! The persuasion of these prelates inflamed the prince with such zeal for the maintenance of the papacy, that, unmindful of every treaty, he sent letters to Valais and the catholic cantons, demanding their assistance propter fidem, in behalf of the true faith, against the cities of Geneva, Lausanne, and others.§ At the same time he despatched orders to his governors, gentlemen, provosts and other officers, 'to ruin and destroy Geneva.' | On the 20th of November a diet was held at Thonon to decide upon the fate of the city; and

^{*} Froment, Gestes de Genève, pp. 110, 111.

[†] Ibid. p. 112.

^{‡ &#}x27;Soutenir l'autorité de la sainte foy dans la ville de Genève.' — Archives of the kingdom of Italy at Turin, bundle xiii. No. 19.

Archives of the kingdom of Italy at Turin, bundle xiii. No. 19.

[&]quot; 'Nuire et détruire Genève.'

as the variocratic unfluence prevailed just then at Berne, the Berne e deputies adopted the anneier resolutions of Savoy Even Charles V declared through and required that, provide no my other measure, the lab is a legible and the period of the glabs a legible and the period of the glabs of General were not without timely Happily the cuixens of Genera were not without timely the period of the matins next day, the syndies pusted them elves at the doors the 24th of December, if they might eclebrate the Christm is The canons having umidly asked the Council, on free, while Rome was attaching Genera, Genera protected stroyed the images of o. Still the Roman wor-hip remained At St Leger, as the church had been demolrshed, they deturned men anay from the true ero s of Jesus Christ't ti, (birs god don a stone cross becru e che tot tetid supurps and popery at the same time. At the Pre I Ereque, the hammer, and with fresh strength begran to demolish the done with decision. The Genevese therefore boldly grasped more timid compromises. For a thing to succeed, it must be there were no more paltry scruples, era ions or delays, no The hour of sacrifices and energetic resolutions had urrared, spark had fallen upon powder, their spirits caught fire by such nens, felt their courage mereased It nas as if a pendence and of the Reformation, metend of heing dejected measures necessary for its defence * The friends of indedanger impending over the city, and accordingly took the and sent them to the syndies. The latter comprehended the sertched them, and discovering their letters took them away places there were nell-di posed persons who stopped and Everybody noticed their embarras ed manner, and in some villages, where they would sometimes halt at the una rigorous orders to his agents, had to pass through certain The messengers commissioned by Charles III to carry his warming of the storm that was about to burst upon them

1535 La sœur Jeanne, Lerana da Calemane, pp. 100-101

^{} Froment, Gentes de Gendere p. 113. I egsetro du Comes I des Inc, 13 Octobre 1534 VISC do Boset Na 11 ch xxx † Registro du Conseil des 28 honembre 3 I) er 11re 1531 et 9 Nerr, of the different churches 'with men-at-arms to prevent annoyance,' until divine service was over.

Geneva had still one hope remaining. Would those same Switzers, who had shaken off the oppression of Austria, permit Savoy to place Geneva under the yoke? Would the protestant republic of Berne, which had done so much to sow the good seed in this allied city, - which to this end had brought thither and protected Farel, Viret, and Froment, - would that republic turn away, now that the grain was beginning to shoot forth, and the harvest was at hand? It seemed impossible. A diet was to meet at Lucerne in January, to deliberate what Switzerland should do in this conjuncture. All the ideas of the Genevans were concentred on that one point. Not only did a majority of the cantons, but the Bernese themselves, consent to the restoration of the duke and the bishop. They required, indeed, that liberty of conscience should be respected; 'for,' said they, 'it does not depend upon man to believe what he wishes; faith is the gift of God.' But the duke and the bishop had the frankness to reject such a condition: 'We claim,' they said, 'the right of ordering everything that concerns religion in our states.' - 'We' mean,' added their representatives, 'that the preachers shall be expelled from the city, and that Berne shall break off her alliance with it.' At these words grief and indignation pierced the Genevan deputies like a sword. 'What!' they said; 'the bishop complains of being robbed of his jurisdiction, and it is he who is the robber! He has been always wishing to strip Geneva of her franchises; and not long ago he transferred the officers of justice, the courts, and the tribunals, to a foreign country.' The diet was inexorable. They resolved that the duke and the bishop should be reinstated in the possession of all their lordships and privileges. To no purpose did Syndic Claude Savoie and Jean Lullin, who were alarmed at this decision, hasten to Lucerne and declare that the matter in the hands of God*.

^{*} Registre du Conseil du 24 Décembre, 1534. La sceur Jeanne, Lerain du Calvinisme, p. 104

Geneva would never accept the articles voted with norm of in the x - x = x of the form of that x - x = x of the form of t

Geneva was handsoned by all, even by Berne The news filled the cutizens with the In-cleast emotion There was nothing left item but God, and God as maybly 'Yes' said they,' be it so, let God decide' Men worked at the walls children in their games defied Savoy and the bishop The bells of the demolished churches were melted down to make connon Every night, men on guard stretched the chines are not so as street, and the walls of the demolished churches were melted down to make or only a supply night, men on guard stretched the chines nero a to streets, and the watchword was to make 'good and on the ward' Byerything was connot also ward' Byerything was carried out with what and mad sure ward' Byerything was carried out with what and mad sure ward' Byerything was carried out with what and and sure ward' Byerything was carried out with what and and sure ward' Byerything was carried out with what and and sure ward' Byerything was carried out with what and and sure ward' Byerything was carried out with what and and sure ward' Byerything was carried out with what and and sure ward' Byerything was carried out with what

Their encaires smiled at the neutraly, and raked how it offind to possible for such a small city to resist the numerous could be possible for such a small city to resist the numerous approach about to march against it. But water more more remains over super, small that the great mission over elength, party over anger, and that the great mission falls ultimately to the just and the cities and the critical mission falls ultimately to the just and the critical mission falls ultimately to the just and the behavior and either great and embrines mad other present and embrines may always that a present any continuation of the present and embrines are always and they face fall across their mids the lightning and they face of the next a wide and combre light over thistory, but they fare founded nothing the justice founded nothing for his face and sold exections to justice; before a present ing facer and sold exections belong to justice;

perseverance, and faith

The spirit of self secrifice and firmines with which the Genorans demolished one balf of their city was a pled-2 of releay. At the beginning of 1555 the work was almost releay. At the beginning of 1555 the work was almost ended A few, however, of the remoter builtings did not ended.

^{*} M3 de flosch lur 1,2 ch xx Registre du Conser ldes b 28 Jaurier, 20 et 21 Febriech, 1655 MS de Gentler † Registre du Conse l des 29 Décembre 1534 8 12, 15 Janvier, 1535.

come down until 1536, and even 1537. Everything was levelled round the walls, the approaches to the place were free, the artillery could play without obstruction, the lines intended to cover the city were formed, the ramparts were built, and Geneva, witnessing the labors of her children, and her sudden and marvellous transformation, might well exclaim by the mouth of one of her poets:—

Allieiens varios have mea forma procos;
Qui me cum blandis non possent fallere verbis,
Ecce minas addunt, denique vimque parant.
Tunc ego non volui pulchrum præponere honesto,
Diripui rigida sed mea pulchra mann
Templa, domos, hortos, in propugnacula verti, Arcerent stolidos quæ procul inde procos.
Diripui pulchrum certe, ut tutarer honestum.
E pulchra et fortis facta Geneva vocor.*

Geneva was then passing through the arduous ordeal of transformation. Rough blows assailed her, grouns burst from her bosom, and on her features was the pallor of death. But in the hour when the sacrifice was thus accomplished on the altar, when riches and beauty were immolated to save independence and faith, when these proud thoughts agitated men's hearts and made their presence known by a cry of agony or by words of high-mindedness, a mysterious light shone forth, in the midst of the darkness; liberty, morality, and the Gospel had appeared. Hopeful eyes had seen a new edifice, radiant with immortal glory, rising above the ruins of the old. The song then heard was not the song of death, but of resurrection.

* 'My beauty attracted many suitors who sought to seduce me. When they saw that their flattering could not make me faithless, they had recourse to threats, and at last prepared to overcome me by force. Then I unwilling to set my beauty above my virtue, destroyed with inflexible hand my temples, gardens, and houses, and converted them into ramparts to keep my insensate suitors at a distance. I destroyed my beauty to preserve my honor. I was once Geneva the fair; now I am called Geneva the valiant.' These lines are preserved in Gautier's manuscript history.

CHAPTER XVI

THE MING OF FRANCE INVITES MELACTHON TO RESTORE

(Ead or 1584 to Averar 1582)

WHILE the work of the Richtmation appeared exposed to great dangers in a small city of the Alps, it had in the eyes of the optimists chances of success in two of the granter countries of Europe—France and Italy The two finest grantees of the reform Melanchion and Calvin, had been summoned to those two countries respectively Luther, summoned to those two countries respectively Luther, henry and pleaty of his faith, was inferior to them as herity in the same probably surpassed than in their capacity to compre pleat in their thoughts all intions and all beautiful and in their thoughts all intions and all buttons and in their thoughts all intions and all buttons and in their thoughts all intions and all buttons and all buttons are

The fir theff of the extreent century in a lite epoch of a great transformation to the people of Lucrope library from the streenth century in a lite piece had been nothing like it tenee the introduction of Chiratenary in the people near infantly who, not living nittended, and the people near infantly who, not living nitational intervely age, could not act for themselvie. The pointern history age, could not act for themselve. The land of the new line guard in the century opened or shut the guits of heavy had done in his terety man onglit to helieve and do dominated in the councils of prince, and excreased a posturity matter, and excreased a posturity matter of the council of the lite councils of prince, and excreased a posturity matter of the matter of the councils of prince, and excreased a posturity matter of the three councils of prince, and excreased a posturity matter of the three councils of prince, and excreased a posturity matter of the councils of princes, and excreased a posturity matter of the prince of the princ influence over all public maintainons.

Rut a read lup us always provi nord. Then a man at anna bin majority, he enters not an enjoyment of lus property and rights, and draing to render an account to more but God, he walks without gearch in a by the lagit which has been consecured gree lim. There as all a a time of may saft for manon, a manor, and Christian secrety ait uned that no, in this six-mad Christian secrety ait uned that no, in this six-mad Christian secrety ait uned that no, in this sixteenth century. From that moment it cented to receive blindly all that the priests taught; it entered into a higher and more independent sphere. The teaching of man vanished away; the teaching of God began again. Once more those words were heard in Christendom which Paul of Tarsus had uttered in the first century: 'I speak as to wise men; judge ye what I say.'* But it must be carefully observed that it was by throwing open the Bible to their generation that the reformers realized this sentence. If they had not restored a heavenly torch to man, if they had left him to himself in the thick shadows of the night, he would have remained blind, uneasy, restless, and unsatisfied. The holy emancipation of the sixteenth century invited those who listened to it to draw freely from the divine Word all that was necessary to scatter the darkness of their reason and fill up the void in their hearts. Elevating them above the goods of the body, above even arts, literature, science, and philosophy, it offered to their soul eternal treasures - God himself. The Gospel, then restored to the world, gave an unaccustomed force to the moral law, and thus conferred on the people who received it two boons, - order and liberty, -which the Vatican has never possessed within its precincts.

All men, however, did not understand that the majority which each must necessarily attain individually is at the same time essential to them collectively, and that the Church in particular must inevitably attain it. There were many, among those who were interested in the prosperity of nations, who felt alarm at the abolition of the papal guardianship. They saw that this stupendous act would work immense changes in the sphere of the mind; that society as a whole, literature, social life, politics, the relations of foreign countries with one another, would be made new. This prospect, which was a subject of joy to the greater number, excited the liveliest apprehensions in others. Those especially who had not learnt that man, as a moral being, can only be led by free convictions, imagined that all socsety would run wild and he lost of that power was suppressed which had so long naturalized and restrained at by the fear of excommunications and the stable. The e men, alarmed at the sight of the free and irrang waters of reform and wishing at any cost to save the nations of Europe from the delage which appeared to threaten them, thought it their duty to confine them still more, to restore, stronghten and rate of the unperalled dives, and thus a long the stagmant and raise the imperalled diles, and thus keep the stagmant A-tors in the fool comals where they had stood for ages Interpretaints and the arise had consistent of the footness with regard to discentive and the arise forms I was not exempt from these fears, and gree a helping hand to a restoration,—often a cruel restoration of the Romash uprastiction. Henry WIII, of little interest as an individual, though great as a king, and a how year truly the fallow, predecessor, and fore-times or the candon description of the Romash uprastiction. Henry Sing, and a predecessor, and fore-times of the candon description of the state of the calculation of the second property of the second predecessor, and the result of the second property of

The idea of restoring unity in the Christian Church of the question descent of these who were actuated by the separate of restoring unity in the office, but the west of those who were occupied with the word. Those who were occupied with this grant protected by the sword. Those who were occupied with this grant protected of deformanced to examine whicher they could not be brought about a protected of deformanced to examine whicher they could not into the word. The idea of into treat of mining from the protection of the protection the foundations of the hberty and greatness of England Frances I, on the other brand, arantismed the prysis ter. Frenency in his dominions, and labored to restore it in the countries where it had been abolished In 1554 and 1555 no see him making great exertions to that end, and finding

They formed three categories
There existed at that time in all parts of Luropo men of wie and learning, children of the Renais ance, who di likel

the superstitions and abuses of Rome, as well as the bold doetrines and severe precepts of the Reformation. They wanted a religion, but it must be an easy one, and more in conformity (as they held) with reason. Between Luther and the pope, they saw Erasmus, and that elegant and judicious writer was their apostle: hence the Elector of Saxony ealled them Erasmians.* They thought that by melting popery and protestantism together they might realize their dreams.

In like manner, too, there were persons to be found of greater or less eminence in whom the desire prevailed to maintain Europe in that papal wardship which had lasted through all the middle ages: they feared the most terrible convulsions if that supreme authority should come to an end. At their head in France was the king. Francis I. had also a more interested object: he desired, from political motives, to unite protestants and catholics, because he had need of Rome in Italy to recover his preponderance there, and of the protestants in Germany to humble Charles V. To this class also belonged, to a greater or less extent, William du Bellay, the king's councillor and right hand in diplomacy. So far as concerns doctrine, both were on the side of Erasmus; but, in an eeclesiastical point of view, while the prince inclined to a moderate papal dominion, the minister would have preferred a still more liberal system.

Finally, there were, particularly in Germany, a few evangelieal Christians who consented to accept the episcopalian form, and even the primacy of a bishop, in the hope of obtaining the transformation of the doetrine and manners of the universal Church. Melanethon at Wittemberg, Bucer at Strasburg, and Professor Sturm at Paris, were the most eminent men of this school. Melanethon went farther than his eolleagues. He believed that the great revolution then going on was salutary and even necessary; but he would have liked to see it limited and directed. Former ages had claborated certain results which ought, in the dimonion, to the the third through the third deeper of the Go pet, that deeper of open could be induced to receive the Go pet, that deeper of of open charles and the subject and the could be induced to receive the receive the receives the receives the receives the receives of the above and solutions, to extend the receives the receives the forest and solutions, to extend the receiver the forest and solutions. The though and solutions to exercise the forest of the the three of the third forest of the third court, had excited an unit 1555, in presence of the there does not the third court, had excited an unit describable horror everywhere. One make the describable horror everywhere. One make the matter and it fractions of France, the batter of the third with the under our France, the batter of the third with the time under the matter of France, Bartelologone with its marders usbered in by the deather article of the third the ticepie of St. Germann l'Auxentorion, that

^{* &#}x27;Die Leute die Gache fordern, mehr Erasmich als Evangelisch sind.' — Bretschneider, Corpus Reformatorum, ii. p. 909.

One common feature characterized all three clarers.

Those who composed them nero in general of an accommonating darpol inton, an evaluation of an accommonate of the composed them, nero in order to satisfies some pract of what they thought thue, in order to attent miner end florible papiets, and on the side of Romo many instable papiets, and on the side of the Reform thou many florible papiets, and on the side of the Reform thou many acceptable of the papiets and nero are side of the papiets and nero a resident of the desired of the one of the desired of the desired of the one of the one of the desired of the of them might not be lost through their cowardies, entrusted to them might not be lost through their cowardies, entrusted to them might not be lost through their cowardies.

they saw pass before them thoso armies of sugaives whom the revocation of the Edict of Nanics scattered over the or taken from them on account of their mynittude.*

The famous placards posted up in the expiral rad all over the famous placards posted up in the capital industrial throuble into the facility of the praceimakers. They had seen, as whether they magnited, the forch suddenly upplied to the bouse in which they were quintly aborms, to reconcile from rad the facilities and they are quintly aborms, to reconcile from rad the facilities and exposes us to the grantest danger, I wrete Summ untr — Godr yed, n di 220 4, Senjiresimie et segisjosienjame terronipas techns et Cenjes betanipa. 4 Coloni from Paris to Melancthon. 'The authors of those placards are men of a fanatical turn, rebels who circulate pernicious sentiments, and who deserve chastisement,' wrote Melancthon to the Bishop of Paris. But at the same time the most energetic of the German protestants, revolted by the cruelty of Francis I., refused to join in union with a prince who burnt their brethren. The King of France had formed the plan of a congress, destined to restore peace to Christendom; but an imprudent hand had applied the match to the mine, and the friends of peace were struck with terror and confusion. From that moment there was nothing heard but recriminations, reproaches, and altercations.

Francis I. saw clearly that, if his project was on the brink of failing, the fault was due mainly to his own violence; he therefore undertook to set straight the affairs he had so imprudently damaged. On the 1st February, 1535, he wrote to the evangelical princes of the empire, assuring them that there was no similarity between the German protestants and the French heretics, his victims. The contriver of the strappadoes of the 21st January, assumed a lofty tone, as if he were innocence itself. 'I am insulted in Germany,' he said, 'in every place of assembly, and even at public banquets. It is said that people dressed like Turks can walk freely about the streets of Paris, but that no one dares appear there in German costume. People say that the Germans are looked upon here as heretics, and are arrested, tortured, and put to death. We think it our duty to reply to these calumnies. Just when we were on the point of coming to an understanding with you, certain madmen endeavored to upset our work. I prefer to bury in darkness the paradoxes they have put forth; I am loth to set them before you, most illustrious princes, and thus display them in the sight of the world.* I think it sufficient to say that even you would have devoted them to excention I writed to prevent the pesultence from spreading over Primer, but not a single German was sent to prace * The men of your nation, princes and nobles, continue to be graciously your nation, princes and nobles, continue to be graciously your nation, princes and nobles, continue to be graciously theorem, on a notice subjecte, and, I may ea,, like my own merchands, and attend why huggiour, I creat mediate a public subjecte, and, I may ea,, like my own and as reaction on the other sade of the Bitmee Michaelpoon and the effect, and there resumed his sobienes of reamon who speak thus are descrives and turncoats. They betray many of the practices ob erved by the ancients. The men that exists in popery, but restore in the protestant churches Christendom Eucei adds that we must not overthrow all maintain harmony of faith between the different nations of single pontiff, residing at Rome, would be very useful to t trut, 'mos bies moundo to et mottomest, 'testes et but a chain, of which if but one hak de broken, all the rest that truth is not a merchan hee which can be cheapened, the temporacre and their neckaces They called to mind gelical flocks, nad loud erres arose from every quarter again. Excessive was the itritation of the evan at their head, were about to return into the bosom of the with an air of triumph that the herenes, with Melanethon beminloorg neat bar tenoisige seoils begards bus bestalistum nanise and by no means upright adherents of eathobetem Hedio, and Bucer to be circulated in Germany † Some ors I had caused the conciliatory opinions of Melanction, threatened to make shipn reck of the whole business Frangreater violence than ever, new difficulties arose, which But a new change then occurred suddenly, and with

^{* &#}x27;Quorum ego paradoxa malo iisdem sepelire tenebris, unde subito emerserant, quam apud vos. amplissimi ordines, hoc est, in orbis terrarum luce memorari.' In the Corpus Reformatorum, ii. pp. 828-835, Bretschneider gives only the German translation of this letter. The original Latin, whose existence we were ignorant of when our third volume was published, will be found in Freheri Script. Rerum German. ii p. 295.

^{*} It appears certain that some Germany were limps somed but they were afterwards released and sent back to Germany by the Ling s order — Bornandierum il. p. 867

You these op n one see supra, vol 1k p 2.08

g.6 d 11 uniornusofen

our cause, they commit a crime.'* If such protestants as these were heard among the Lutherans, doctors such as Farel and Calvin spoke ont still more plainly against all attempts at a union with popery. 'It is wrong,' wrote Calvin afterwards to some English friends, 'to preserve such paltry rubbish, the sad relics of papal superstition, every recollection of which we ought to strive to extirpate.' † The thought that Francis I. was at the head of these negotiations filled the Swiss theologians in particular with ineffable disgust. 'What good can be expected of that prince,' said Bullinger, 'that impure, profane, ambitious man? ! He is dissembling: Christ and truth are of no account in his projeets. His only thought is how to gain possession of Naples and Milan. What does this or that matter, so that he makes himself master of Italy?' These honest Swiss were not wanting in common sense. Alarmed at the trap that was preparing for Reform, Bullinger, Blaarer, Zwyck, and other reformed divines wrote to Bucer: 'It is of no use your contriving a reunion with the pope; thousands of protestants would rather forfeit their lives than follow you.'

At the same time the Sorbonne and its followers raised their voices still higher against all assimilation with Lutheran doctrines. The storm swelled on both sides, and burst upon the moderate party. Poor Bucer, driven in different directions, succumbed under the weight of his sorrow. 'Would to God,' he exclaimed, 'that, like the French martyrs, I were delivered from this life to stand before the face of Jesus Christ!'§

Every hope of union seemed lost. The ship which the politic King of France had launched, and to which the hand

^{* &#}x27;Vocor transfuga, desertor . . . me totam causam prodidisse.'

— Melancthon to Du Bellay. Corpus Reform. ii. p. 915.

^{† &#}x27;C'est un vice d'entretenir des menus fatras.' — Calvin, Lettres Françaises, i. p. 420.

^{‡ &#}x27;De Gallo, homine impuro, profano et ambitioso.' — Bullinger to Myconius, 12 March, 1534. Corp. Ref. p. 122.

^{§ &#}x27;Ego velim cum Gallis martyribus Christum adire.' — Bucer, Zeitschrift für Hist. Theol. 1850, p. 44.

of the prous Melanction had fastened the banners of peace, by deen carried upon the breakers, all uttempts to get ber can again appeared useless, there was neither writer caucily to float her, nor wand enough to move her She sample as about to be abradoned, when a saiden because cately ber from the shallows, and hunched her from the shallows, and hunched her were more more

Usernent VII baying died of chagrin, occasioned by the four days after his election declared his intentions in full reed the ambresadors of Charles V to call a council and acquire a greater glory than that of the Medicis He prom Prul III undertook to restore unity, and thus hoped to Innethon Leo X, hequeathed schism to Christendom France, but a pope of Rome also, making advances to Mereforming the Church We shall find not only a ling of tion for hunself and his family, was engrossed wholly with decessors This man, who had so much need of reforma wonld follow very different principles from those of his pre of sixty-seven, and declared that in religious matters he upon the triple crown He obtained it at last, at the age cardinal, and from that bour kept his eyes steadily fixed two illegitimate children, a son and a daughter, he was made through a window by means of a rope. Although he had attracted by the procession of Corpus Christi to escape tage of the moment when the attention of his pailers was mother's orders in the castle of St Angelo, he took advanan irregular life On one occasion, being imprisoned by his dens of Lorenzo de' Medici, and from his youth had hyed of the world, he had studied at Florence in the famous garunder the title of Paul III, succeeded Clement, was a man gree lum still greater aberty Alexander Frenese, who, rine's uncle. Ere long the choice of the Sacred College thenceforward liberated from the promises made to Calbeception and sorrow," the King of Prance considered himself prospect of a future in which he could see nothing but de-consistory. 'I desire a reform,' he said; 'before we attempt to change the universal Church, we must first sweep out the court of Rome:' and he nominated a congregation to draw up a plan of reform. Proud of his skill, he thought that everything would be easy to him, and already triumphed in imagination over the Germans, who were, in his opinion, so boorish, and the Swiss, who were so barbarous. Francis I., satisfied with this disposition of the pope, was not unaware, besides, that he had private means of communicating with him. The first secretary of his Holiness was Ambrosio, an influential man and by no means averse to presents. A person who had need of his services having given him sixty silver basins with as many ewers, 'How is it,' said a man one day, 'that with all these basins to wash in, his hands are never clean?'*

^{* &#}x27;E in questo dolore ed affanto che le condusse alla morte -- Soriano in Eanle, 1 p 127

But the work of union was not to be so casy as the conjunction of two such stars as Farnese and Valois seemed to promise. While the Romish Church was being toned down at Rome, popery became stricter in France. The fanatical party that was to acquire a horrible celebrity by the crimes of the Bartholomew massacre and of the League, was beginning to take shape round the dauphin, the future Henry II. That youth of eighteen, who had not long returned from Madrid, was far from being lively, talkative, and independent, like a young Frenchman, but gloomy and silent, and appeared to live only to obey women. There were two at his side, admirably calculated to give him a papistical direction: first, his wife, Catherine de Mcdicis, and next his mistress, Diana of Poitiers, a widow, still beautiful in spite of her age, and who would not (as it has been said) have spoken to a heretic for an empire. The mistress and the wife, who were on the best of terms, and all of the dauphin's party, endeavored to thwart the king's plans. The most influential members of that faction were continually repeating to him that the protestants of Germany were quite as fanatical and seditious as those of France. At the same time, the ^{*} Warchi, Istorie Fiorentine, p. 636. Ranke.

t, Good Er sullem concern et Church Clourem beutmipaier - Confr Bel

canon i p. 11 Bibliothèque Impérale. See also Barmer, Mistore Luteraue de l'Eda Bibliothèque Elzevirenne. There are seven manuscript copies in the des Jemmes marrees et a marrer. It was reprinted in 1854 by Jamet, in the I Lacre du Cheralier de la Tour Landry qui fut fuit pour l'entregnement * Moren, are. Du Bellay Europe, so that people supposed hun to have a familiar prirrite secrets of the emperor and of all the princes of matists of his epoch. He knew, says Brantome, the most specially one of the most distinguished generals and diplocau-e of the Gospel and the glory of Christ,' t but he was desire, he sad, that nothing may happen igurious to the ham, the elder, was not void of Christian sentiment. 'I barticularly seemed to have responded to this preyer Wilhonorable, loring and serving God't Wilhun and John be filled with perfect joy if they grow up good un! I love as a father ought to love them, my heart will tion I bear to my children, wrote the old caralter, 'whom the parents of the Du Bellajs. 'Out of the great affecgribs nas printed in 1914, perhaps by the direction of which became numerous. The treatise intended for the tion one for his sone, the other for his daughter, copies of bred in the fourteenth century, wrote two works on educala Tour Landty, seignior of Bontmont and Claremont, who education. After a life of busy warfare, the Chevalier de had occupied bimself with laying down the rules of a good Tour-Landry, reckoned among ber ancestors a man who the reign of Lothaire, and their mother, Margaret de la families in France, their nobility could be traced back to beld firm The Du Bellays belonged to one of the oldest that its realization appeared a matter of difficulty Germany to the reconcidation of Christendom were such with the Turks. The obstacles opposed in France and German protestants that Francis L was an infidel in alliance emperor's agents, animated by the same intention, told the spirit. Although maimed in his limbs—the consequence of his campaigns—he was a man of indefatigable activity. His brother John, Bishop of Paris, who was also 'another master-mind,' professed like him an enlightened catholicism; and hence it happened that on the accession of Henry II. he was deprived of his rank by the intrignes of the papist party, and driven from France. Still, to show that he remained a catholic, he took up his residence in Rome.

But in the midst of these intrigues the moderate party

TLA MOOR

189 rd rn

In 1535 the moderate catholic party, at the head of which were these two brothers, seeing the chances of success at Rome as well as at Paris, resolved to take a more decided step, and to invite Melancthon to France. The proposal was made to Francis I., and supported by all the members of the party. They knew that Melanethon was called 'the master of Germany,' and thought that if he came to France he would conciliate all parties by the culture of his mind, by his learning, wisdom, piety, and gentleness. One man, if he appears at the right moment, is sometimes sufficient to give a new direction to an entire epoch, to a whole nation. 'Ali, sire,' said Barnabas Voré de la Fosse, a learned and zealous French nobleman, who knew Germany well, and had tasted of the Gospel, 'if you knew Melancthon, his aprightness, learning, and modesty! I am his disciple, and fear not to ' tell it you. Of all those who in our days have the reputation of learning, and who deserve it, he is the foremost." *

These advances were not uscless: Francis I. thought the priests very arrogant and noisy. His despotism made him incline to the side of the pope; but his love of letters, and his disgust at the monks, attracted him the other way. Just now he thought it possible to satisfy both these inclinations at once. Fully occupied with the effect of the moment, and inattentive to consequences, he passed rapidly from one extreme to another. At Marseilles he had thrown himself into the arms of Clement VII., now he made up his mind to hold out his hand to Melancthon. 'Well!' said the king, since he differs so much from our rebels, let lime come I shall be enchanted to bear him. This gree greet delight to the peacemakers 'God has seen the afficient of his children and heard their cries, exclaimed burn 'francis of ordered Do is Fosso to proceed to Germany to Transcraf ordered Do is Fosso to proceed to Germany to

^{* &#}x27;Cum rege diu de te locutus est, ita ut te omnibus, qui nostris temporibus docti et habentur et sunt, prætulerit.' — Corp. Ref. ii. p. 857.

A king of France inviting a reformer to come and explained in the verse reas something rety new. The two prince-principles were reas something rety new. The two princes pri obstacles which impeded the Reformation seemed now to per another for the reformers in France, the exclusive firmness of their decrinace, and the rate, the tolerant, the learned scholar, was to attempt the task. There cond obstacle use the factlences and opposition of Frances 1, but it was this prince who made the advances. There are pour it is was this prince who made the advances and one of those hours seemed to have arraved "God, who rules the tempests," exclaimed Sturm, 'is showner us a harbor of relige? I

The friends of the Gospel and of light set earneath to voir. It was necessary to persuade Aldernathy, the Bischool might be a fash of sand the protestants of Germany, which might be a fash of same difficulty. But the mediators did not shrink from before obstacles, they raised powerful interests, they traised powerful interests, they traised powerful interests, they traised powerful interests to earry the fortness. Sturm, in particular, sparied of section of the study the fortness. Sturm, in particular, sparied of section of the fortness of George has graing at the Royal Colling, has described canong whom was Peter Roman) for paring his described and adorned their minds—nother paring but described into different disputes, developed and adorned their minds—nother minds—nother study has been defined burrent disputes, the burrent, the Beautiful in the productions of genuss, but he had a deep feeling of the drine tions of genuss, but he had a deep feeling of the drine grandeur of the Gospel Men of letters in those times.

1 Deus portem aliquem profugum celendie - fold p 558

^{*} Sento respict a Deo calemnestions affectas et affactas bonuman conditiones. — Corpus Acformationum, u p 898

especially in Italy, were often negative in regard to the things of God, light in their conduct, without moral force, and consequently incapable of exercising a salutary influence over their contemporaries. Such was not Sturm: and while those beaux-esprits, those wits were making a useless display of their brilliant intelligence in drawing-rooms, that eminent man exhibited a Christian faith and life: he busied himself in the cultivation of all that is most exalted, and during his long career, never eeased from enlightening his contemporaries.* 'The future of French protestantism is in your hands,' he wrote to Bucer; 'Melancthon's answer and yours will decide whether the evangelicals are to enjoy liberty, or undergo the most ernel persecutions. When I see Francis I. meditating the revival of the Church, I recognize God, who inclines the hearts of princes. doubt his sincerity; I see no hidden designs, no political motives; although a German by birth, I do not share my fellow-countrymen's suspicions about him. The king, I am convinced, wishes to do all he can to reform the Church, and to give liberty of conscience to the French.' † Such was, then, the hope of the most generous spirits - such the aim of their labors.

Sturm, wishing to do everything in his power to give France that liberty and reformation, wrote personally to Melancthon. He was the man to be gained, and the professor set his heart upon gaining him. 'How delighted I am at the thought that you will come to France!' he said. 'The king talks much about you; he praises your integrity, learning, and modesty; he ranks you above all the scholars of our time, and has declared that he is your disciple. ‡ I shed tears when I think of the devouring flames that have

^{*} See Schmidt's Vie de Jean Sturm, premier recteur de Strasbourg.

^{† &#}x27;Da Franz I. auf Erneurung der Kirche sinne bereit sei zur Kirchenverbesserung, das seine zu thun, und die Gevissen frei zu lassen.' - Sturm to Bueer. Schmidt, Zeitschrift für die Hist. Theol. 1850, i. p. 46. Strobel, Hist. du Gymnase de Strasbourg, p. 111 &c.

t 'Non rogatus se discipulum tuum esse dixit.' - Corpus Reformatorum, ii. p. 857.

parture?

of God hunself calls you.* The letter is dated from Paris, But they are not alone the voice of Christ, nay, the voice who invite you me men who are againg again t derth Trouble yourself neither about emperors nor hings those you would keep our brethren suspended above the fames violent tempests, and show us the braven. A refusal from your free will be our salvation Come into the midst of our you to find a remedy for these evils

O Melancibon I to see dence in those who adhere to the truth, that he applies to perceives so many defects in the old cause, and such imprin tacked The king, who is of a good disposition at bottom, to you at the very time when our cause is so derrely itterable calamities What a strange thing! brance appeals eyes with love upon the souls who are threatened with unut and gurring those free, then I feel that God is turning his hing invites you to advise with him as to the means of exconsumed so many noble hves, but when I learn that the

I am ready, he wrote to Melancthon, 'prepare for your deonly, but all nations that the Father has given to the Son ren in Jesus Chits! It is not this nation or that nation other nations, who are they? I be asked 'All our breth 'The French, Germans, Italians, Spaniards, and who had also been invited, made preparations for his de could not fail to touch the protestants of Germany, Bucer, of real unity and Christian charity Such cries of distress form had penetrated, had revived in men a hearts feelings The Holy Scriptures, which were read wherever the Re 4th March, 1535 often resisted Rome? Had not the university of Paris Church. Had not her Lings and especially Louis XII, would put herself at the head of the great revival of the blany persons, even in Germany, had hoped that France What could Melancibon do? that was the great question

Zeristyn far 11 st Theor 1850 p 47 1. Om enne Counen der jest den Hebens et ann - Somm ge * Sed advocars to Des Cheschque voce - Corp Ry's p 859

been the rival of the Vatican? Was it not a Frenchman who, cross in hand, had roused the West to march to the conquest of Jerusalem? Many believed that if France were transformed, all Christendom would be transformed with her. To a certain point, Melancthon had shared these ideas, but he was less eager than Bucer. The outspoken language of the placards had shocked him; but the burning piles erected in Paris had afterwards revolted him; he feared that the king's plans were a mere trick, and his reform a phantom. Nevertheless, after reflecting upon the matter, he concluded that the conquest of such a mighty nation was a thing of supreme importance. His adhesion to the regenerating movement then accomplishing might decide its success, just as his hostility might destroy it. He must do something more than open his arms to France, he must go to meet her.

Melancthon understood the position and set to work. First, he wrote to the Bishop of Paris, in order to gain him over to the proposed union, by representing to him that the episcopal order ought to be maintained. The German doctor did not doubt that even under that form, the increasing consciousness of truth and justice, the living force of the Gospel, which was seen opening and increasing everywhere, would gain over to the Reformation the fellow-countrymen of St. Bernard and St. Louis. 'France is, so to speak, the head of the Christian world,' he wrote to the Bishop of Paris.* The example of the most eminent people may exercise a great influence over others. If France is resolved to defend energetically the existing vices of the Church, good men of all countries will see their fondest desires vanish. But I have better hopes; the French nation possesses, I know, a remarkable zeal for piety.† All men turn their eyes to us; all conjure us, not only by their words, but dy their terrs, to prevent sound learning from deing stifled,

^{* &#}x27;Cum regnum gallicum, si licet dicere, caput christiani orbis sit.'— Corpus Reformatorum, ii. p. 869.

[†] Gallica natio eximium habet pietatis studium.' - Ibid.

On the same day, 9th of May, 1595, Melvaction wrote to Starm 'I will not suffer myself to be prevented either by domestic ties or the fear of danger. There is no lumpa grandeur which I can prefer to the glory of Christ Only hand to thought checks me I doubt of my ability to do any hint I consider necessary to the glory of the Lord and the peace of Trance. If you can dispel these apprehensions, I shall masten to France, and no purson shall affaght me I shall finate to France, and may be made as the Church and Premark and the final fine of the Church and the facility of the Lord and the france and the final fine Church and the facility of the final fine Church and the facility of the final fine of the fine of the final fine of the fine of the final fine of the fine of the final fine of the final fine of the final fine of the final fine of the fine friend De la Fosse joined them, and all the friends of brothers united in entreating the hing to send for Luther's The two make Brance politically independent of Rome desired, while leaving to the pope his spiritual authority, to tanning a wise and prous reform, the councillor of Francis I. cially desired a union with Melancthon in the hope of ob-Mith his brother William While the new cardinal espepleasant far beyond what I can express? It was the same mode of seeing things is not agreeable. As for myself, it is one of our friends here, he said, to whom Melanchons it and among others, no doubt, to the king 'There is not communicated his letter to such as might feel an interest in sentiments expressed to him by the muster of Germiny, be The Reformation was appreaching Delighted with the trary, it gave him more power to realize the great project restoration of truth and unity in the Church, on the conbut the new dignity in nowice diminished his desire for the out effect. That prelate had just been made a cardinal, Melancthon's letter to the Bishop of Paris n as not with-

t , Alba vero etam sapra quam dier potest jueundum — Ibid p 880

^{*} Veror ut impetrari en poss nt quas nd giorian Christi et tranqu'i blestem Gallia et Boolesia necessaria esse duco — Oripus Reformatiorum, u p. 876.

peace, in conjuring the king to give the German doctor some proof of his good-will. 'He will come if you write to him,' they said.

Francis I. made up his mind, and instead of addressing the sovereign whose subject Melanethon was, the proud king of France wrote to the plain doctor of Wittemberg. This was not quite regular; had the monarch written to the elector, such a step might have produced very beneficial results; not so much because the susceptibility of the latter prince would not have been wounded, as because the reasons which Francis, with Du Bellay's help, might have given him, would perhaps have convinced a ruler so friendly to the Gospel and to peace as John Frederick. It is sometimes useful to observe the rules of diplomacy. This is the letter from the King of France to the learned doctor, dated 23d of June 1535.

- 'Francis, by the grace of God King of the French, to our dear Philip Melanethon, greeting:
- 'I have long since been informed by William du Bellay, my chamberlain and councillor, of the zeal with which you are endeavoring to appease the dissensions to which the Christian doctrine has given rise. I now learn from the letter which you have written to him, and from Voré de la Fosse, that you are much inclined to come to us, to confer with some of our most distinguished doctors on the means of restoring in the Church that divine harmony which is the first of all my desires.* Come then, either in an official character, or in your own name; you will be very acceptable to me, and you will learn, in either case, the interest I feel in the glory of your Germany and the peace of the universe.'

These declarations from the King of France forwarded the enterprise; before taking such a step, he must have

^{* &#}x27;Quo resarciri possit pulcherrima illa ecclesiasticæ politiæ harmonia qua una re cum ego mihi nihil unquam quicquam majori cura, studio complectendum esse duxerim.' — Corp. Ref. ii. p. 880.

burot alive * dragged on a hurdle to the place of execution, and there sufficient grace of Jesus Christ, he was condemned to death, lia adt et insunfortte and m madadanu bonnamen nemband tenaive knowledge of Holy Scripture. As the pious hus example patents, the truth of his fath and displaying in exwhen they beard that poor persact proving to them, in his expected to see an idiot appear before them, were astomshed work to the fields, and taken to Macon The judge, who bandman of La Bresse, John Cornoo, was arrested while at month when Francis I wrote to Melancibon, a poor bus but the interlude was a blood stained tragedy. In the very ministers played the chief parts That may be questionable, the whole affair was a comedy in which the king and his tests beautaining search earned od? evolodes has essained be ut the lower regions which ran conoter to those fine projects ang in the upper regions of society, scenes were occurring there are striking contrasts. While these things were passever, if the letter was sincere. In history, as in nature, heen very clear in his intentions We may well ask, how-гре рточисея of January, the influence of which had only then reached new orders, but a mere sequel to the cruelues of the 21st to probable that the execettons were not the result of any of an immense concourse of people from every quarter 1 16 yours at Angers, and there he was burnt alive, in the midst was made r great show It was the time of the grunds as the husbandman of La Bresse had been, and his death solution they had found in the Bible Brion n as condemned, speaking in succession bore testimony to the hght and con priests so much as these meetings, where simple Christians, per one who assembled to hear lum. Mothing annoyed the not only to those who visited him but also to a number of taken in his shop. He had often expounded the Scriptures, burber of Sancerre, near Paris and a reputed hereing, was In the following mosth of July, Dennis Brion, 1 humble

* Crespin, Actes des Martyres p 116

1 IP q b 150

These two executions, however, made the necessity of laboring to restore peace and unity still more keenly felt. Those engaged in the task saw but one menns: to admit on one side the evangelical doctrine, and on the other the episcopal form with a bishop primus inter pares. Western Christendom would thus have a protestant body with a Roman dress. The Church of the Reformation (it was said) holds to doctrine before all things, and the Church of Rome to its government; let us unite the two elements. The Wittemberg doctors hoped that the substance would prevail over the form; the Roman doctors that the form would prevail over the substance; but many on both sides honestly believed that the proposed combination would succeed and be perpetual.

At the same time as De la Fosse started for Wittenberg, the new cardinal, Du Bellay, departed for Rome: two French emmbassies were to be simultaneously in the two rival cities. The ostensible object of the cardinal's journey was not the great matter which the king had at heart, but to thank the pope for the dignity conferred upon him; still it was the intention and the charge of the Bishop of Paris to do all in his power to induce the catholic Church to come to an understanding with the protestants. Before quitting France, he wrote to Melancthon: 'There is nothing I desire more earnestly than to put an end to the divisions which are shaking the Church of Christ. My dear Melanethon, do all you can to bring about this happy pacification.* If you come here, you will have all good men with you, and especially the king, who is not only in name, but in reality, most Christian. When you have conferred with him thoroughly, which will be soon, I trust, there is nothing that we may not hope for. God grant that at Rome, whither I am going with all speed, I may obtain, in behalf of the work I meditate, all the success that I desire.' †

[†] The letter is dated: 'Ex fano Quintini (St. Quentin) in Viromanduis, die 27 Jun. anno 1535.' — Ibid.

^{*} In hanc pacificationem, mi Melanethon, per Deum quantum potes incumbe.' — Corp. Ref. ii. p. 581.

us If, after he bas written to you with his own hand, after thing the king, whose favor you will confe a is neces ary to cillor of Francis I to Melanethon, 'let us beware of 1777of religion and of France 'Let us beware, wrote the councause in question was the greatest of all it was the cau e the motives and removing objections. In his eyes the to a successful issue, wrote to the German doctor, explain was determined to spare no pains to bring the great schemo letter, and Wilham du Bellay, an intelligent statesman, who estants De la Fosse left for Wittenberg, bearing the Ling's cardinals, others were canvassing Melynethon and the prot While he was on his way to confer with the pope and ment to establish the so much desired unity in the Church might, in concert with Mclancidon, be the chosen matru the mark of a great soul ! He thus won men's bearts, and man, had a noble appearance, and displayed in every act of Paris, an enlightened and skilful diplomatist and pious arrangement between calliolics and protestrats The Bishop also, for no one desired more strongly than Chriles V an of France, and to a certain point by the imperial influence most piece at Rome he would be backed by the influence Cardinal du Bellay found himself in a very farorable atgreater day by dry in Italy * It thus happened that couraged them to do so. The bopo of a reform grew them to contradict him in the coosistory, and even entheir lives. He left them entire liberty, he permitted known for their exangelical sentiments and the purity of dioalate Containn and several other prelates who were metropolis of extholicism The new pope rured to the carshould be skillully combined, was acquiring favor in the Church, in which evangelical doctrines and Romish forms party to which he belonged, which deared one sole Cathobe The cardinals journey was of great importance. The ^{ &}quot;Molte and tearst in prediction on erange skein question fromtes utwart in each on erange of the state of the cross blotts neggester di direct to propose plotts a stor of protos a speare di giorne as groom on aggiven informa. —

 Albe day dis Commenting dalli Generae, 1551 Handee

The day distributed on the speare of giorne as groom on a speare of the speare

you have almost given your consent, after he has sent you a deputation, in whose company you could make the journey without danger, - if you finally refuse to come to France, I much fear that the monarch will not look upon it with a favorable eye. It is necessary both to France and religion that you comply with the king's request.* Fear not the influence of the wicked, who cannot endure to be deprived of anything in order that the glory of Jesus Christ should be increased.† The king is skilful, prudent, yielding, and allows himself to be convinced by sound reasons. If you have an interview with him, if you talk with him, if you set your motives before him, you will inflame him with an admirable zeal for your cause. Do not think you will have to dissemble or give way. . . . No; the king will praise your courage in such serious matters more than he would praise your weakness. I therefore exhort and conjure you in Christ's name not to miss the opportunity of doing the noblest of all the works which it is possible to perform among men.

As we read these important letters, these touching solicitations, and the firm opinions of the councillor of Francis I., we are tempted to inquire what is their date. Is it in reality only five months after the strappadoes? One circumstance explains the startling contrast. France might say: 'I feel two natures in me.' Which of them shall prevail? That is the question. Will it be the intelligence, frankness, love of liberty, and presentiment of the moral responsibility of man, which are often found in the French people; or the incredulity, superstition, sensuality, cruelty, and despotism, of which Catherine de Medicis, her husband, and her sons were the types? Shall we see a people, eager for liberty, submitting in religious things to the yoke of a Church which never allows any independence to individual thought? Strange to say, the solution of this important question seemed t 'Mirabiliter eum inflammares.' - Ibid.

^{* &#}x27;Necessarium esse religioni et Galliæ ut regiæ exspectationi satisfacias.' — Corp. Ref. ii. p. 888.

^{† &#}x27;Non enim est quod metuas iniquorum potentiam ' - Ibid.

to depend upon a reformer. Should Melanethon come to Erance, he would, in the apanon of the Du Bellays and the heat intellects of the age, margurane with God's help in that illustrious counity the reign at the Gospel and aberty, and but an end to the usurpations of Kome.

If the great enterprise at which some of the greatest and most powerful personages were then working succeeded, if the tendency of Catherine and her sons (continued unforts much by the Bourbons) were neveronac, France was saved it was a solern opportunity Never, perhaps, had that great nation heen nearer the most important transformation.

In addition to the appeals of Du Bellay, no means were in addition to the appeals of Du Bellay, no means were

Christians * enter the kingdom, provided they lived as good catholic confiscated goods restored and the fugitives permitted to remolested, that all prisoners should he set at liberty, their being appeased, persons accused or suspected should not be 1535, in which he declared that 'the anger of our Lord words to deeds, published an annesty on the Leth July, mession to Melancihon Francis I, wishing to pass from Genera, was intrusted by the Queen of Maraire with a sion professor at Paris, rector at Mismes, and pastor at Baduel, n bo, after studying at Wittemberg, was in succeshun on many unportant points And more than this, Claude him the reformer would find that the sovereign agreed with and that, if his views were laid clearly and fearlessly before very far from sharing the religious ideas of the protestants, to the Wittemberg doctor, telling him that the Ling was not spared to persuade Germany Sturm wrote another letter

As l'amors I did not rush to natura the court of Kounce, and destruct to prevent it from mierfering and seching to disturb and destruct in plane, be called Condural du bielly to hun as short time before his departuse, and said lour and pair from the mass cauding your brother to the previous missing your brother to the previous missing of the mass of the conduction to the house can from them to at the very less it my previous means to an incomplement of the previous on them to an one of the previous on them to an one of the previous on the conduction of the previous of the previous of the conduction of the previous of the previous of the conduction of the previous of the previous of the conduction of the previous of the previous of the conduction of the previous of the previous of the conduction of the previous of the conduction of the previous of the knowledge the power of the pope as head of the Church universal. With regard to faith, religion, ceremonies, institutions, and doctrines, he will preserve such as it will be proper to preserve,—at least, what may reasonably be tolerated, while waiting the decision of the council. . . . Matters being thus arranged, our Holy Father will then be able earnestly and joyfully to summon a conneil to meet at Rome, and his authority will remain sure and flourishing; for, if the enemies of the Holy Sec once draw in their horns in Germany, they will do the same in France, Italy, England, Scotland, and Denmark.'*

85h q 14x baomeid 60h q nx ftedmasl *

The opinions of Francis I. come out clearly in these instructions. The only thing he cared about was the preservation of the pope's temporal power. As for religion, ceremonies, and doctrines, he would try to come to an understanding,—he would get what he could; but the protestants must pull in their horns,—must renounce their independent bearing. The king declared himself satisfied, provided the people of Europe continued to walk beneath the Caudine forks of Romish power.

It was not loug before the king showed what were his real intentions, and towards what kind of reconciliation a council would have to labor, if one should ever be assembled, which was very doubtful. On the 20th July, the Bishop of Senlis, his confessor, requested the Sorbonne to nominate ten or twelve of its theologians to confer with the reformers. If a bombshell had fallen in the midst of the Faculty, it could not have caused greater alarm. 'What an unprecedented proposal!' exclaimed the doctors; 'is it a jest or an insult?' For two days they remained in deliberation. 'We will nominate deputies,' said the assembly, 'but for the purpose of remonstrating with the king.' 'Sire,' boldly said these delegates, 'your proposal is quite useless and supremely dangerous. Useless, for the hereties will hear of nothing but Holy Scripture; dangerous, for the eatholics, with are week in faith, may be perverted by the objections of the heart.

^{*} Instructions des rois très chrétiens et de leurs ambassadeurs (Paris 1654), p. 7.

Let the Germans commune Let the Germans commune on the territies.

Let the Germans continue may be used to a second on the second on the territies of which there can be no checkerseion with beredites. If we meet them, it can only be as their with beredites. If we meet them, it can only be as their bidges. It is a divine and a furnant may to the continue of the territies.

Judges, the statement of the body. It such is the duty of the statement of the continue that a second on the meeting much more is it their duty against a second.

de de des pas que distincidon Ne décisie au roi son adris ; dista de disputer vis-à-vis . . . Nos nistires d'y voulent enlendie.

The politicians were not silent. The prospect of an agreement with the protestants deeply moved the oblicits of the Konnan party, who resolved to do all in their power to oppose the attempt. Alentmorency, the grand master, the branch, and others exerted all their influence to prevent Memorian, the Thempo of Soiscons, de Charlesu-hinaid, and others exerted all their influence to prevent Memorian from them coming to Prance, Cardinal du Bellay from another in the Memorian and protestants from the Memorian and protestants from the Memorian and protestants from the Memorian and Soiscon and Prances of Francis I.

^{*} Baliue et Bouchiguy. Crevier, Med. de l'Université, v. pp. 25-6.

This fanatical party, which was to make common cause with the Jesuits, already forestalled them in cunning. 'One morning,' say Roman-catholic historians, " 'Cardinal de Tournon appeared at the king's levée, reading a book magnificently bound.' 'Cardinal, what a handsome book you have there!' said the king. 'Sire,' replied De Tournon, 'it is the work of an illustrious martyr, Saint Irenaus, who presided over the Church of Lyons in the second century. was reading the passage which says that John the Evangelist, being about to enter some public baths, and learning that the heretic Cerinthus was inside, hastily retired, exclaiming: "Let us fly, my children, lest we be swallowed up with the enemies of the Lord." That is what the apostles thought of heretics; and yet you, Sire, the eldest son of the Church, intend inviting to your court the most celebrated disciple of that arch-heretic Luther.' De Tournon added that an alliance with the Lutherans would not only cause Milan to be lost to France, but would throw all the catholic powers into the arms of the emperor.† Francis I., though persisting in his scheme, saw that he could not force those to speak who had made up their minds to be silent; and wishing to give De Tournon some little satisfaction he let the Faculty know that he would not ask them to confer with the reformers. The king intended to hear both parties; he sought to place himself between the two stormy seas, like a quiet channel, which communicates with both oceans, and in which it was possible to manœuvre undisturbed by tempests.

The refusal of the Sorbonne, at that time more papistical than the pope himself, does not imply that a conference between protestant and catholic theologians was impossible; for six years later such a conference really did take place at Ratisbon, and nearly succeeded. A committee, half protestant, half Romanist, in which Melancthon and Bucer sat, and in which the pious Cardinal Contarini took part as papal ^{*} Pallavicini, Maimbourg, Varillas, &c.

[†] Maimbourg, Calvinisme, p. 28. Varillas, ii. p. 449.

Ognice, admitted the evangelical fault in all essential points, and declived in particular that man is justified not by his and declived in particular that man is justified not by homers, but by fault alone in the merits, but by fault alone protestants had always done, that the fault which justifies must work by love. That meet the fault which justifies amust work by love. That meet they fault shows from the fault of particular the strength which passed on the protein and the interpretation of the fault of the fault and the strength as a solemn that the fault of the most believing members of the Roman catholic Church to the Chirstern dectraces of the Roman catholic Church to the Chirstern dectraces of the Reforman

CHAPTER XVII

AITT THE ATTEMPT TO RETABLISH UNITY AND TRUTH

(dedt manuson or randus)

Was she among a member of by so many eminent ment of be for good or for evil? On this question different opinions may be and have been, entertained. Certain made the to many be, and have been, entertained a cartact and distainin upon human ascorations. It is true that marteret and distainin upon the total distaining the total distaining the total distaining the total distaining a monologue and a distage. Before the err of Chiratinning, these to the cecond part of the exampler of a hope, and this is both the cecond part of the example of the cecond part of the example of the cecond part of the same manual to the example the example of the cecond part of the same part of the condition of the central and distained the manufactured the action of the one man and the manufactured the condition of the central maturious also sorted the maturial and the condition was encomped apart. Chiratinumy regenerates and maturious and conved the maturious of the central maturious and conved the maturious and the control of the central and the central and men to unite with Goo, and at the same time it proclaimed the great unity of the human race, and undertook to make into one family all the families of the earth, by giving the same heavenly Father to all. It imparts a fresh intensity to individuality by teaching man that a single soul is in God's eyes of more value than the whole universe; but this, far from doing society an injury, becomes the source of great prosperity to it. The more an individual is developed in a Christian sense, the more useful a member he becomes of the nation and of the human race. Individuality and community are the two poles of life; and it is necessary to maintain both, in order that humanity may fulfil its mission in revolving ages. The mischief lies in giving an unjust pre-eminence to either of the two elements. Romish unity, which encroaches upon individuality, is an obstacle to real Christian civilization; while an extreme individuality, which isolates man, is full of peril both to society and to the indi-It would therefore be unreasonable to convidual himself. demn or to approve absolutely the eminent men who in 1535 endeavored to restore unity to the Church. The question is to know whether, by reconstructing catholicity, they intended or not to sacrifice individual liberty. If they desired a real Christian union, their work was good; if, on the contrary, they aimed at restoring unity with a hierarchical object, with a despotic spirit, their work was bad.

^{*} Acta in conventu Ratabonens 1541 by Mclancibon and Bucer

There was another question on which men were not more agreed. Would the great undertaking succeed? France continued to ask for Melancthon; would Germany reply to her advances? We must briefly glance at the events which had taken place in the empire since the agreement between the catholics and protestants concluded, as we have seen, in July, 1532.* These events may help us to solve the question.

It had been stipulated in the religious peace that all Germans should show to one another a sincere and Christian friendship. In the treaty of Cadan (29th June, 1534), protestant Germany to accept the proposals of Trance events, which we have indicated, seemed to have prepared had so often demanded, would be granted them All the day that the free and Christian general council, which they berg as early as 1922. At last it appeared clearer every resisting the sectaring sprint this they had done at Willemevangelicals telt more strongly than ever the necessity of olics, who had put them down But from that hour, the hanchery, heardes, it was the protestants, and not the cath nilb a brutal communism, recking with cruelty and denot injure the protestant cause, which was not confounded the pretended hingdom of Zion * These extravagances did took Munster on the 24th June, 1535, and put an end to of the profestant cause, marched against these madmen, dance The Landgrave, Philip of Hesse, one of the lenders eermon the whole congregation nould sometimes begin to pulpit was erected at the side of the throne, and after the would often cut off the head of a condemned person A a golden crown, to sit in judgment in the market place, and te restore polyguny He used to paride the city, wearing a community of goods, and attempted, like other sectarians, and been proclaimed king af Zion He had also established self up for a prophet, bad made himself master of the city, fanaticism John Bockhold, a tailor of Ley den, setting hunphaha, had become the theatre of the extravagances of perial court. Somewhat later, the city of Munster, in Westprotect the protestants against the proceedings of the unhad undertaken, both for himself and for Charles V, to Ferdurand, who had been recognized as King of the Homans,

^{*} Supra, vol. ii. ch. xxi. bk. 2.

Vocé de la bosse, bearing lettors from Francis I, William du Delliny, and other frends of the unton, was gong to Germann to tvy and bring it to a successful is use Do la Fo e many to tvy and bring it to a cuccessful is use a those who figured at London and at Rome, and the power to which he figured at London and at Rome, and the power to which he was a accredited was a professor in a petly town of Strony

e.ck. historia delle Anadophistorina monasteriensis, by H von Errescu

ргогоде

But Germany called this professor her 'master,' and De la Fosse considered his mission a more important one than any that had been confided to dukes and cardinals. Christendom was weakened by being severed into two parts; he was going to re-establish unity, and revive and purify the old member by the life of the new one. The Christian Church thus strengthened would be made capable of the greatest conquests. On the success of the steps that were about to be taken depended, in the opinion of De la Fosse and his friends, the destiny of the world.

The envoy of Francis I. arrived at Wittemberg on the 4th of August, 1535, and immediately paid Melancthon a visit, at which he delivered the letters intrusted to him, and warmly explained the motives which ought to induce the reformer to proceed to France. De la Fosse's candor, his love for the Gospel, and his zeal gained the heart of Luther's friend. By degrees a sincere friendship grew up between them; and when Melancthon afterwards wanted to justify himself in the eyes of the French, he appealed to the testimony of the 'very good and very excellent Voré.' * But if the messenger pleased him, the message filled his heart with trouble; the perusal of the letters from the king, Du Bellay, and Sturm brought the doubts of this man of peace to a climax. He saw powerful reasons for going to France and equally powerful reasons for staying in Germany. To use the expression of a reformer, there were two batteries firing upon him by turns from opposite quarters, now driving him to the right, now to the left. What would Charles V. say, if a German should go to the court of his great adversary? Besides, what was to be expected from the Sorbonne, the clergy, and the court? Contempt. He would not go. On the other hand, Melancthon had before him a letter from the king, pressing him to come to Paris. An influential nation might be gained to the Gospel, and carry all the West along with it. When the gods

^{* &#}x27;Viri optimi et fidelissimi Voræi testimonium.' — Melancthon G-Bellaio, Corp. Ref. ii. 315.

Lord calls, must we allow ourselves to be stopped by fear:

4. He bestatical no longer he nould depart Yord de la Foese wrsa delighted. But evelong coliter though of the resong content and we have a magnination. What was there not to be ferred from a prince who had sworm, stand
there not to be ferred from a prince who had sworm, stand that to stop heresy froe would, it necessarry, cut off has own of the strappadoes, a deep gulf had opened in the midst of
of the strappadoes, a deep gulf had opened in the midst of his church. West if his business to throw himself, Curtuushis, not the hard.

The church are a more than one of the strappadoes, and of the strappadoes, and of the strappadoes, and of the strappadoes, and the business to throw himself, Curtuushis, not the above, we would a ultingly leave to the form of the strappadoes, and of devoting immedit to the infernal young Homan the glory of devoting immedit to the infernal contrary, you despise the king's invitation, all hope is 1050 lously transported into the safest of havens § If, on the ment you come, we shall find ourselves, as it were, mirrensay by my mouth, furious tempests assail us, but the mowho dwell in Paris Threatening waves surround us, they the whole world ‡ Hearken to the friends of the Gopel depends not only the fate of France, but (so to speak) of We will spare nothing On your interview with the king escort you and bring you back? It shall be given you? have them also Do you want an armed guard of honor to ask for hostages as guarantees for your return? You shall Trance and returning? You shall have them Do you for royal letters to secure to you full liberty of going to We will do a hatever you desire, he eaid Do you will a employed every means to induce him to cross the Rhine. De la l'osse vicited the illustrious professor daily, and ^{*} Volum eo Joculus de profectione ad Regem,—Cameranus I ild Méléonethomie, p. 148 Cameranus was an nulmate friend of Melanc Molon s. † Obsides qui darentur dum adecsock. Pressidis quibus dedu

t, Prene ord s terratum fortunam esse positam - 18ed.

in this fluctions et sevissimis tempestabbus fam portum et tutusben man stationem — l'été.

for us. The fires now slumbering will instantly shoot forth their flames, and there will be a cruel return of the most frightful tortures.* It is not only Sturm, Du Bellay, and other friends like them who invite you, but all the pious Christians of France. They are silent, no doubt—those whom the cruellest of punishments have laid among the dead, and even those who, immured in dungeons, are separated from us by doors of iron; but, if their voices cannot reach you, listen at least to one mighty voice, the voice of God himself, the voice of Jesus Christ.'†

When Melancthon heard this appeal, he was agitated and overpowered. What an immense task! These Frenchmen are placing the world on his shoulders! Can such a poor Atlas as he is bear it? How must he decide? What must he do? In a short time his perplexity was again increased. The French gentleman had hardly left the room when his wife, Catherine daughter of the Burgomaster of Wittemberg, her relations, her young children, and some of his best friends surrounded him and entreated him not to leave them. They were convinced that, if Melancthon once set foot in that city 'which killeth the prophets,' they would never see him again. They described the traps laid for him; they reminded him that no safe-conduct had been given him; they shed tears, they clung to him, and yet he did not give way.

Melancthon was a man of God, and prayed his heavenly Father to show him the road he ought to take; he thoroughly weighed the arguments for and against his going. 'The thought of myself and of mine,' he said, 'the remoteness of the place to which I am invited, and fear of the dangers that await me ought not to stop me. Nothing should be

^{* &#}x27;Sopiti ignes rursum suscitarentur, et suppliciorum immanitas recrudesceret.' — Ibid.

[†] Advocari ipsum Dei Christique Jesu voce.' — Camerarius, Vita Melancthonis, p. 148.

^{‡ &#}x27;Afficiebatur atque perturbabatur.' - Ibid.

^{§ &#}x27;Non respectus ad se aut suos, non longiquitas loci, non periculorum metus.' -- Ibid. p. 149.

THE REPORTATION IN EUROPF

through my precipitancy. Will not the French, while givimportance, and to make the disease still more incurable me: I fear to act imprudently in a matter of such great thoughts ought to be concentred; but this is what disturbs Church troubled by such great tempests. Upon that all my deliverance of so many pious men, and the peace of the more sacred to me than the glory of the Son of God, the renounce, retain the most important articles in which false-Urassessen teum yeht daidw staiog laivist omes no yew Bai patchwork would produce more harm than good. hood and impicty are especially found? Alas such from a conference with fanatical doctors. Besides, the he in a position to net upon it? 't He expected nothing cellent at bottom. 'Yes, replied Luther's friend, 'but is and assured bim that the disposition of Francis L was exreturning to his friend, sought to banish his apprehension; There was much truth in these fears; but De la Fosc, Christendom are useless and dangerous. ing its convocation. All other means of succoring afficted and therefore the prince ought to set his beart upon hasten. not the Church. A council alone has power to reform it; Sorbonne refused all discussion. 'The bing,' he sad,' is Church: he has never shown so much care, anxiety, and had anything more at beart than to beal the wounds of the home, the envoy of Francis I. continued: 'The Ling never wishes to converse with you.' Then, desiring to stribe and it is just on that account that the King of France At least we must prepare the way for the council, he said; De la Fosse turned Melancthon's objection against him-

Will you withhold from the afflicted Church the hand that nith more joy in France than any stranger before you. zeal. If you comply with his wishes, you will be received

Vita Meluncilonus, p. 160. * 'In quibus potissimum falsitas impietutia resideret. - Cameranus,

1917 to 1901 - 'Aedatidab asuna non - non eile efficere - non sino causa dabitabat' -

animi complectendam duxisse." - Camerarius, Vita Melanethonu, p. 124. t, Nullam enm tem undanm melote Regem cura, etudio, sollicitudios can save her? Let nothing in the world, I conjure you, turn you aside from so pure and sacred an enterprise.'* De la Fo-se was agitated. The idea of returning to Paris without Melanethon—that is to say, without the salvation he expected—was in-supportable. 'Depart,' he exclaimed, 'if you do not come to France! . . . I shall never return there.'†

Melanethon was tonehed by these supplications. thought he heard (as they had told him) the voice of God himself. 'Well, then,' he said, 'I will go. My friends in France have entertained great expectations and apply to me to fulfil them: I will not disappoint their hopes.' Melanethon was resolved to maintain the essential truths of Christianity, and hoped to see them accepted by the catholic world. Francis I, and his friends land not rejected Luther's fundamental article, - justification solely by faith in the merits of Christ, by a living faith, which produces holiness and works. According to the most eminent and most Christim orator of the Roman Church, Mekmethon combined learning, gentleness, and elegance of style, with singular moderation, so that he was regarded as the only man fitted to succeed in literature to the reputation of Erasmus.' ! But he was more than that: his convictions were not to be shaken; he knew where he was, and, far from seeking all his life for his religion - as Bossnet asserts - he had found it and admirably explained it in his Theological Commonplaces.§ Still be constantly said to his friends: 'We must contend only for what is great and necessary.' |

Melanethon, who was full of meekness, was always ready to do what might be agreeable to others. Sincere, open, ^{*} Neque se abduci ullius persnasione sincret ex tam pio sanctoque instituto. - Ibid.

[†] Er wollte nicht in Frankreich wiederkommen, so ich nicht mit zöge '- Corp. Ref. ii. p 905.

[‡] Bossuel, Hist. des Variations, t. i. fiv. v. ch. ii. et xix.

[§] Loci communes theologici. They went through sixty-seven editions, and were translated into several languages.

[&]quot;Non puto contendendum esse, nisi de magnis et necessariis rebus.' -- Melanethon Sturmio, Corp. Ref. ii. p. 917.

encrince himself. In history we sometimes meet with chir-Francis I twas the language of a Christian ready to proaches of Germany 'I will go,' he said to the envoy of resolved to brave the dangers of Trance and the bitter reof unity and truth, this simple hearted bashful man was all events De la Losse had decided him For the trumph catholic could have told him that this was impossible cerved without receiving his doctimes every frue Roman present case, was in beheving that the pope could be re which, however, he would soon repress His error, in the was stirred, he nould break out with sudden impetuority, etrongly, his anguish could be very bitter, and n hea his coul of faith, and although a man of extreme gentleness, he felt had a horror of unbiguous lunguage, especially in matters ad Little interestables But with all the emakality bus and exceedingly fond of children, he liked to play with them nciers who enlarge our ideas of moral greatness. Melanc thon was one of them.

But would his prace, allow lam to go? The prejudices of Germany against France, besides numerous political and representations much indicates the desire. These Tolkgous considerations, might influence the elector. These were difficulties that might cause the elector. These were difficulties that might cause the enterprise to fail the noble minded professor resolved to do all in by power to overcome them. The university had just removed from Writtenberg to Jenn an account of the plague. Menoriton, quinting Thuringra, directed his course hashly towards the hanks of the Bibe, and arrangs at I forgat, where the court was staying; it the old ensite one is a prepared to the court was staying; it the old ensite outside the court was staying; it has old ensite outside the court was staying; it has old ensite outside the court was staying; it is old castle outside the court was staying; it is old castle outside the cut in the court was staying; it is old cut longest, after other sectors to present his respects to lite of ecctor.

John Frederick was attended by many of his councillors and countries, and notwithstanding tile esteem to fit is the frederic for an of dissalabilitation and reserve true straible in his face. The elector was offended because the King of France, invetend of applying to him, had written direct to one of his subjects, but garver montres canced him to te grant life Wittenburg doctor's praject with displevente.

It was no slight thing for Melancthon, who was naturally imid and bashful, to ask his sovereign for anything likely o displease him. Without alluding to the letter he had received from Francis I., which he thought it wiser not to mention, he said: 'Your Electoral Grace is aware that eighteen Christians have been burnt in Paris, and many others thrown into prison or compelled to fly. The brother of the Bishop of Paris has endeavored to soften the king, and has written to me that that prince has put an end to the executions, and desires to come to an understanding with us in regard to religious matters. Du Bellay invites me to mount my horse and go to France.* If I refuse, I appear to despise the invitation or to be afraid. For this reason I am ready in God's name to go to Paris, as a private individual, if your Highness permits. It is right that we should teach great potentates and foreign nations the importance and beauty of our evangelical cause. It is right that they should learn what our doctrine is and not confound us with fanatics, as our encmies endeavor to do. I do not deceive niyself as to my personal unimportance and incapacity; but I also know, that if I do not go to Paris, I shall appear to be ashamed of our cause, and to distrust the words of the King of France, and the good men who are endeavoring to put an end to the persecution will be exposed to the displeasure of the master. I know the weight of the task imposed upon me . . . it overwhelms me . . . but I will do my duty all the same, and with that intent I conjure your Grace to grant me two or three months' leave of absence.'

Melancthon, according to custom, handed in a written petition.† John Frederick was content to answer coldly that he would make his pleasure known through the members of his council.

The ice was broken. France and Germany were face to face in that castle on the banks of the Elbe. The opposi-

^{* &#}x27;Ich wollte einen Ritt in Frankreich thun.' — Corp. Ref. ii. p. 904. † Ibid ii. pp. 903-905.

toon mmediately showed stack The audience given to Ablanchon set all the court in motion The Carmana reprir prevaled there more than the evangeheal spirit, and the found who were willing to hold out their brands to Francis I triviated the upon Alekanchion, and addressed him rudely Girled will be tenderest Relings, the noble bearted man was deeply the tenderest Relings, the noble bearted man was deeply may screes, or rather of hatreds and the court is full of the stack of the stack perial Maye 17, and the other princes of Germany, would religion, he fears that if he sent a deputy to Paris, his im cussing with the emperor several questions which concern cannot expose your safety, but as he is on the point of disall sorts of reasons are against it. Not only his Highness ting you to make a hasty and perilous journey to Trance, intentions were good he will overlook it, but as to permit have engaged yourself in it without his consent. As your mitted to him is of such importance, that you ought not to His Highness informs you that the business you have sub doctor with a severe look, and said to him in a harsh tone if they desired to reject his doctrines. He received the hghtened, he saw that it was dangerous to accept the pope, decided than Melancthon, and in some re pects more enall the princes of Germany, was an excellent man, more the Evangelical Confession to Charles V in the presence of Bruch, who at the famous diet of Aug-burg had presented latinizing names - had been intrusted with this mission. hetter known as Pontanus, according to the fashion of the Diector had been cold, this was tey Chancellor Bruchto him on the part of their master. If the interview with John Frederick's councilors had a communication to make elector The next day, 16th of Angust, he was informed that He swatted with anxiety the official communication from the

^{*,} Val ca duradam provipes vel potes odia sunt - Onp Reform th

imagine that he was charged with negotiations opposed to the declarations we have made to them. That journey might be the cause of divisions, quarrels, and irreparable evils.* You are consequently desired to excuse yourself to the King of France in the best way you can, and the elector promises you he will write to him on the subject.

Melanethon withdrew in sorrow. What a position was his! His conscience bade him go to Paris, and his prince forbade him. Do what he would, he must fail in one of his most important duties. If he departs in defiance of the elector's prohibition, he will not only offend his prince, but set Germany against himself, and sacrifice the circle of activity which God has given him. If he remains, all hope is lost of bringing France to the light of the Gospel. Hesitating and heart-broken, he went first to Wittemberg, desiring to confer with Luther, and did not conceal from his friend the deep indignation with which he was filled.† He was called to raise the standard of the Gospel in an illustrious kingdom, and the elector opposed it on account of certain diplomatic negotiations. He declared to Luther that he would not renounce the important mission, and he was fortified in this opinion by the sentiments which that reformer entertained. The two friends could speak of nothing but France, the king, and Du Bellay. 'As you have consulted me,' said Luther, 'I declare that I should see you depart with pleasure.' He also made a communication to Melancthon which gave the latter some hope.

Having been informed of the audience of the 15th, the reformer had just written to the elector. The eries of his brethren in France, delivered to the flames, moved Luther at Wittemburg, as they moved Calvin at Basle. The French reformer addressed an admirable letter to Francis I., and the German reformer endeavored to send Melancthon to brance That is my firm resolve? ?

^{* &#}x27;Zerrüttung, unwiederbringlicher Nachtheil, Beschwerung und Schade zu erfolgen.' — Corp. Ref. ii. p. 908.

^{† &#}x27;Subindignabundus hinc discessit,' said Luther. Ep. iv. p. 621.

^{† &#}x27;Philippus me consule libens proficisceretur.' — Lutheri Ep. iv. p. 621.

the prince, through whose states Melancthon would probably throwing the volume on the ground, trampled upon it It to the Romans, exclaimed "The man is possessed, and ence, after reading Melancibon's commentary on the Eprelle bering an anecdote, he continued 'The Archbishop of Maybelongs to Satan, and Satan to the world. Then, remem the worst, my fears for Philip merease. Alast the norld and his colleagues, of all the devil a matriments, they we Luther, he said 'In this I clearly recognize that bi hop umbrage to the protestants. When these rumors reached bert of Asyence, the ecclesisatical elector, in particular gave an ambuscade 'If he departs, he is a dead man's Al a view to influence Melancthon, for whom they had prepared tuted De la Fosse for him, and green him forged letters with hilled the real ambassador on the road, that they had subsit crossed the Rhine It was reported that the papers had that Melancthon would be assasmated, even before be had tions, and circulated extraordinary stories. M iny prophesied Belote long the people grew tued of jests and suppose BOOK ALL THE REPORTATION IN EUROLE 988

rather see God take him to himself than permit him to go danger at Paris - danger both to body and soul I would the Bible Melancthon will infallibly meur the reliest who must sumers the di ciples of Erasmus than of would scandalize Christians and injure the Go pel there would arise a disminin between you and him that you, doctor, and the other theolograns would grant, and hence France, he will concede to the prpiets far more than what before hun 'I fear,' he said, 'that if Melancthon goes to The elector, perceiving this, put more solid arguments take The great reformer began to change his mind men as he was returning by the road Melancibon must very Archhishop Albert, bad been murdered by some horsethe pious paster of Halle, having been summoned before this nuthor? Luther was shaken In 1527, George Winchler, have to pass, treated the book thus, what nould be do to the

Before long the people grew treed of Jests and suppose-THE REPORTATION IN RUBOLE 988

BOOK ATL

take The great reformer began to change his mind men as he was returning by the road Melancihon must very Archbishop Albert, had been murdered by some horse the prous pastor of Halle, having been summoned before this author? Luther was shaken In 1527, George Wuchler, have to pass, treated the book thus, what nould be do to the the prince, through whose states Melancthon would probably throwing the volume on the ground, trampled upon it . If to the Romans, exclaimed "The man is possessed" and ence, after reading Melancibon's commentary on the Epr ile berng an ancedote, be continued 'The Archbishop of Maybelongs to Suan, and Satan to the world. Then, rememthe worst, my fears for Philip merease Alas I the norld and his colleagues, of all the devils matruments, they are Luther, he said 'In this I clearly recognize that bishop umbrage to the protestants. When these rumors reached bert of Mayence, the ecclesiastical elector, in particular gave an ambuscade 'If he departs, he is a dead man' Al a view to influence Melancthon, for whom they had prepared tuted De la Fosse for him, and given him forged letters with hilled the real ambassador on the road, that they had subsit brd elegand that being a reported that the pands by that Melancilion nould be assassinated, even before he had tions, and circulated extraordinary stories M iny prophesical

rather see God take him to himself than permit him to go danger at Paris - danger both to body and sould the Bible Mclanethon will infallibly meur the greatest who myte him are more the di ciples of Erasmus thin of would scandalize Christians and injure the Go pel Those there would arree a disunion between you and him that you, doctor, and the other theolograns would grant, and bence France, he will concede to the papiets far more than what before him 'I fear,' he said, that if Melancthon goes to The elector, perceiving this, put more solid arguments

† Corpus Reformed is p. 909 Seckendorf, Hutorice des Lutherthuns n. 1433. * Luther to Jones, 1 Sept. 1535. Pp w p 628 to France That is my firm resolic ' t

These communications seriously affected Luther: the elector attacked him on his weakest side. The reformer venerated Melancthon, but he knew to what sacrifices his desire for union had more than once been on the point of leading him. If Melanethon was the champion of unity, Luther was the champion of truth: to guard the whole truth with a holy jealousy was his principle. The Reformation, he thought, must triumph by fidelity to the Word of God, and not by the negotiations of kings. Recovering from his first impressions, he said to Melanethon: 'I begin to suspect these ambassadors.' * From that moment he never uttered a word in favor of the journey. Still the dangers of the protestants of France were never out of his thoughts. 'Must we abandon our brethren?' he asked himself perpetually. A luminous idea occurred to him: Suppose the evangelicals were to leave France, and come to Germany in search of liberty. † He engaged to receive them well. Luther anticipated the Refuge by a century and a half.

By degrees the elector gained ground, and the extraordinary adventure proposed to Melancthon became more doubtful every day. From the first the prince had had the politicians and courtiers with him; then the men of letters and citizens, alarmed by the sinister reports, had gone over to his side; and now Luther himself was convinced. Melanethon remained almost alone. His sympathetic heart longed to remove the sword hanging over the heads of the French evangelicals, and it seemed as if nothing could stop him. John Frederick endeavored to convince him. Beyond a doubt, the French reformation, driven at this moment by contrary winds, must reach the haven; but the task must be lêft to its own crew. Every ship must have its own pilot. John Frederick, therefore, wrote a severe letter to Melancthon, and the tender-hearted divine had to drink the cup to the dregs. 'You declared that you were ready to undertake

^{* &#}x27;Ego suspectos cœpi habere istos legatos tuos.' — Lutheri Ep. iv. p. 627.

^{† &#}x27;Invenirent loca in quibus viverent.' - Ibid.

anned by the elector, had pierced his beart. His decision This was too much Melancthon stopped, the arrow, non bresume on the contrary to vex us and thurst our plant? while we have a right to expect that you will second us, do sine to disturb the public peace of the German nation, and of seeing the evangelical seed bear fruit there. Do you dereceive from Prance are well calculated to make us despair great extent, and the success very doubtful. The letters we them to effect their conversion? The undertaking is of nations should be brought to the Go-pel, but must we go to we are obliged to respect them We desire that foreign of France and the emperor, and you are not ignorant that matter You know the relations existing between the King Erectly displeased to see that you had gone so far in the whom God has established as your superior We were You should, however, have thought of your duty to us, a journey to France, said the elector, 'without consulting us. 24 X008 THE RESORBATION IN PUROPE 888

Mclancihon's simple and tender heart was crushed by his agraph at the chancellor's desire ! th with you Consider it well. He suppressed this parengrage in this adventure. But we leave all the respon thisspatch 'Go, were his words, 'go and do as you please, elector had been still more severe, when he dictated the dein the margin the words we have just quoted 't not go. He afterwards underlined the presage, and wrote I'm I' bina ed 'sbrow essell le serrese' be and 's will

, Liobter pase rerba nolut producted "- Corpus Med te pall in note Espo Espracht wurden -- Corpus Reform u p 911 * Wir viel mehr forden wollten dasz fremde nationes zu dem bran would do much better to be content with their schools and other theologums nere obstunte and almost unbecile, and only reward. The courtiers maintained that he and the seeing the Reformation trumph, and now di grace was his ness, he had determined to brave danger, in the hope of POACAGER, a disentisfaction Surmounting his natural shy.

The passage is found in Bruck a copy (Weimar Irchires), but n t m The statics in the text indicate the I nes underse re i by Relancinon leave the government of the Church to others. Melancthon lightened his grief by sharing it with his friends; he wrote to Camerarius, to Sturm, and even to William du Bellay. The great hellenist, who had lived much among the ancient republics of Greece, imagined that Europe was already overrun by the evils under which those states had perished. 'I have never known a more cruel prince,' he said to them: 'with what harshness he treats me!* He not only does not permit me to depart, but he insults me besides. My fault is in being less obstinate than others. confess that peace is so precious in my eyes that it ought not to be broken except for matters really great and necessary. Oh! if the elector did but know those who take advantage of this proposed journey to sow discord! It is not the learned who do it, but the ignorant and the fools. call me deserter and runaway. . . . O my friend, we live under the régime of the democracy, that is to say, under the tyranny of the unlearned,† of people who quarrel about old wives' stories, and think of nothing but gratifying their passions. How great is the hatred with which they are inflamed against me! . . . They slander me and say that I am betraying my prince.' Theramenes was condemned to drink hemlock because he had substituted an aristocracy or government of the worthiest for a democracy, and governed the state with wisdom. 'I do not deceive myself,' he exclaimed; 'the fate of Theramenes awaits me.' I

Melancthon was not the only sufferer; his faithful friend, Luther, did not fail him. Although he was now opposed to the French journey, John Frederick's letter disturbed him seriously; it appeared to him that great changes were necessary, and a stormy future loomed before him. 'My heart is sad,' he wrote to Jonas, 'for I know that such a severe letter will cause Philip the keenest anguish. . . . All

^{* &#}x27;Nunquam sensi asperiorem principem.' — Corpus Reform. ii. p. 915.

^{† &#}x27;Nunc autem est democratia aut tyrannis indoctorum.' — Ibid. p. 917.

t 'Plane fatum mihi Theramenis impendere videtur.' - Ibid. p. 918.

Tripen the 1s b egg

6. Scincel no ad respublican adsidents — thad p (33) f thesp o estim up co gradere nos ad ania contenni el excludi — thad f 'An devoral esta litera satas punicipa — thad p 6.2

Trinds A. Additional find not yet desprished his letter in bestrated his letter in the state of the state of ut the prospect Church would have no other support but God, and rejoired Luther appeared to foresee a time when the evangeheal government.§ May God strengthen us therein! Amen' late, we obtain early - namely, not to be concerned in the done is done without us What Demo-thenes desired too hereafter very sorely. Now we are safe, for whatever is disturbances, which we might perchance have to lament ness of God so that we should not be maxed up with these despises and excludes us ‡ It all happens through the good speciators, and I begin to congratulate myself that the court this adventure? As for us, we much prefer being merely the court, he said, ' bee how it boasts of being an actor in ence between Church and State 'Admire the nisdom of reformer thought that this business might occarion a differtarily? There is some difficulty in deciding Perhaps the

What were the thoughts that occurred to Luther myolun

this awakens thoughts which I would rather not have Arother time I will tell you more at precent I am overwhelmed with sorrow. Then, feeling uneasy rhoun Lielancihon, ho wrote to him 'Have you sendlowed our prince's letter?\footnote{\text{T}} I neas exceedingly agriated by it from fore pleasure, by permitting Melancthon to go to France, especially as it was for an extraordinary propagation of the Gospel, so as to make it yield the most abundant and the richest fruit.* But we had to take into consideration the difficulties of the present times.' Then, as a final reason, the elector added: 'Lastly, we do not remember for certain . . . that your Majesty has written to as about Melancthon. If in any future contingency you should write to as for him,' continued John Frederick, 'and should assure as that he will be restored safe and sound, we will permit him to proceed to you. Be assured that we shall always readily do whatever we can to propagate the Gospel of Christ in every place, to favor the temporal and spiritual interests of your Majesty, your kingdom, and its church, and to hasten the deliverance of the Christian commonwealth.'

Melancthon, to whom the elector communicated this letter,† feared that instead of quieting the King of France, it would only irritate him still more. He could not bear the idea of answering ungratefully a powerful monarch who had shown such kindness towards him. This thought engrossed him from morning to night. On the very day when the Elector Ferderick's letter was despatched, Melancthon sent off three, the first of which was for the king. He feared, above all things, that Francis I. would relinquish the great enterprise that was to restore muity and truth to the Church. He therefore wrote to him, suppressing the indignation he felt at the elector's refusal. 'Most Christian and most mighty king,' he said, 'France infinitely excels all the kingdoms of the world, in that it has continually been a vigilant sentinel for the defence of the Christian religion. ! Wherefore, I humbly congratulate your Majesty for having undertaken to reform the doctrine of the Church, not by violent

^{* &#}x27;Ad insignem propagationem, uberrimum et amplissimum fructum Evangelii.'—Johannes Fredericus ad Franciscum regem Galliæ. Corpus Reform. ii. p. 906.

[†] Corpus Reform. ii. p. 903.

^{‡ &#}x27;Pro religionis christianæ defensione præcipue velut in statione perpetuo fuit.' — Ibid. p. 913.

remodies but by reasonable means, and I beseech your remodies but by reasonable means, and I beseech your state of the fact of thon, had struck deep root in the doctor's mind. Sadoleh The work of union to wluch Frincis I mysted Melanehis powers in setting forth the glory of Christ ?? brother the cardinal, that he will henceforward employ all mind will be so guided by your advice and by that of your up France 'I hope,' he said in conclusion, that the Ling's I will hasten to you ' He had not, therefore, entirely given la Posse to go to Frankfort shortly, whence, if it be desired, rehgion Touching the Journey, I have promised Vore de of men shall not rob me of moderation of spirit or zent for and the calumnes of the people? . . But the injustice of the most Christian king, the barsh treatment of the elector, than to be expected at one and the same time to the anger Could anything be more distressing, he said to Du Bellay, the letters he wrote the same day to Du Bellay and Sturm the king, he allowed the emotions of his heart to be seen in

Bislop of Carpentras (natural natural de cardinal de la diseaseaue, the reformer wrote to Slumn that Endoder advecated idea, or reformer wrote to Slumn that Endoder advecated the cardinal de natural natural de la disease d

gretted to see birn indulgo in such bitter aftacks upon the * 'Suscipil curan sansadas doctimas christians, non tamen violente procedus, sed vera rations. * - Assk

^{† &#}x27;Ut poins (rex.) det operam, nt silustretur giosa Christs." - Corpse Reform is p 916

protestants.* A little later, when the illustrious Budæus, on whom he had counted, praised Francis for his zeal in expiating and punishing the assaults of the heretics,† Melanethon was hurt, but not disconcerted. 'I have read his treatise,' he said to Sturm, 'but what does it matter? All these things inflame rather than cool me; they fan my desire to go to you, to make my ideas known to all those learned men, those friends of what is good, and to learn theirs. Let us unite all our forces to save the Church: no injustice of man shall check my zeal.' ‡

In this respect Melancthon did not stand alone: Francis I. showed no less energy, and was careful not to be offended at the elector's refusal. The alliance of the protestants beeame more necessary to him every day. The prince who did so much in France for the arts, and who, as the patron of scholars, received the title of Father of Letters, desired a reform after Erasmus's pattern. There was a very marked distinction, which it is impossible to overlook, between Francis I. and his son Henry II.; but the love of knowledge was not the king's chief motive: he entertained eertain political designs which greatly increased his eagerness for an alliance with the protestants. The Duke of Milan was just dead, and the ambitious Francis desired to conquer the duchy for his second son. Moreover, the evangelical party was not without influence at court: Margaret, Queen of Navarre, Admiral Chabot, and many noblemen favored the Gospel; and they were supported by the Du Bellays and others of the moderate party. The men of the Romish faction rallied round Diana of Poitiers and Catherine of Medicis.

The king had discovered that John Frederick had felt hurt at seeing a foreign monarch address one of his subjects on a matter touching the cause of which the elector was re-

^{* &#}x27;Sadoleti scriptum eadem dicit quæ nos defendimus.' — Ibid. p. 917.

[†] See his treatise: De transitu Hellenismi ad Christianismum, dedicated to the king in 1535.

t 'Hoc studium nulla mihi eripiet hominum iniquitas.' - Corp. Ref.

The protestatin are the play, the spears of the largeturers are confined as the protest of the protestation are severe about to reconder an includent and alloance and burdents and stope and stope and severe about a stope of the protest and severe and severe are some and are alload as a severe and severe are the severe are the severe and severe are the playing an obsert the severe are severed and the protest and severe are severed and the protest and severe gentlement has been also be severed as the severed and the protest and severed and the protest and ordered William and Bellay and ordered William du Bellay.

The Chomra party were greatly aginted when they beard of the kings a micentons, and again attempted to thurst a propect they regarded as highly permissus. The Sobome represented to Francis I that no concession ought to be made, and proceeded to demonstrate, after an extraordinary fabriou, the articles rejected by the Lutherans. "They demy fabricular first power of the samps to health the such, earl the chologram, but is not this mirraculous power proved by the virtie of kings of France possess of healthg the said by the outle? Frances I was an extraordinary samp, and cuck an argument probably amused him more than it convenced him. The Cradinal Do Tournon proceeded more no. ely, by relienting to the momer's that he could not three follows:

Cradinal Do Tournon proceeded more no. ely, by princing to the momer's hind he could not three forms are more in a principle of the pope. But even this argument in nithous the Taracas II he by hyperincing the relief of the pope for the country of the momer's fine of the property of the p garded as the head

Trancas probably thought the prince assocytibility to be very astarch, and therefore, instead of breaking with him, determined to profit by the leason the had received. He would re une his plane, but he would received may be soon, or rather all the protestrat princes united, according to reme, and to arond reminding them of the first fault, the name of Melanethons should not be mentioned from an of the learned professor and of the powerful mon and came, we may be sure, from different sources, one and came, we may be sure, from different sources, one and came with the man of the powerful mon and came with the same with to start for Germany. The latter was still more zealous than his master, and fearing he should arrive too late, wrote from Lorraine (where he happened to be staying) to the Elector of Saxony, praying him to prolong the meeting for a few days, 'as the King of France had intrusted him with certain propositions touching the peace of Christendom.'* The news of such a mission delighted the friends of the Reformation, and filled the Roman party with indignation. 'Never,' said Sturm, 'never before now has the cause of the Gospel been in such a favorable position in France.'† The elector, Melancthon, and Du Bellay arrived at Smalealde in the middle of December.

The ambassador of Francis I. immediately demanded a private audience of the elector, and on the 16th December handed him the letters in which the king, with many professions of zeal for the pacification of the Christian Church, besought the elector to co-operate earnestly 'in so pious and holy a work.' I John Frederick was not convinced; he always set religion before policy, but he knew that Francis I. adopted the contrary order. Fearing, accordingly, that behind this pious work, the king concealed war with the emperor, he immediately pointed to the insurmountable barrier which separated them: 'Our alliance,' he said, 'has been formed solely to maintain the pure Word of God, and propagate the holy doctrine of faith.' The diplomatist was not to be baffled: there were two pockets in his portfolio - one containing religious, the other political matters. Opening the former, he said: 'We ask you to send us doctors to deliberate on the union of the Churches.' Germany spoke of

^{* &#}x27;Ad publicam christianæ reipublicæ pacem spectantibus.' 2d Dec., 1535. Corp. Ref. ii. p. 1015.

^{† &#}x27;Nunquam in meliori loco fuit res Evangelii, quam sit hoc tempore in Gallia.' Sturm to Bucer.

^{‡ &#}x27;Maximopere obtestantes ut pro virili nobiscum incumbatis in tam pium sanctumque opus.' Corp. Ref. ii. p. 1010. Scckendorf says (Hist. Luth.) p. 1146) that this letter had been sent to the Elector beforehand; but in the documents of the State Paper Office at Weimar we read: 'Hæc locutus reddidit principi litteras quas vocant eredentiales.' And the Corpus gives in a note the letter we have just quoted.

write no more to Melancibon he would ridates the elector had received . He would resume his plane, but he would breaking with him, determined to profit by the le son he susceptibility to be very natural, and therefore, instead of Eurded as the head Frances probably thought the princes end to meal furnment brove of base served frustr out of Bus in person, or rather all the protestant princes united, accord

The Romish party were greatly agitated when they heard tesire uningted both of them proceeded from on high the other from below, but the same nch came, we may be sure, from different cources, one the zeal of the learned profes or and of the powerful mon first fault, the name of Melanethon should not be mentioned molect they regarded as bighly permicious The Sorbonia if the hings intentions, and again attempted to thwart a ardinal De Tournon proceeded more no ely by rederanng robably amused hun more than it convinced him rancis I, was an extraordinary cand, and such in argument ings of France possess of healing the cold by a touch? put is not this mitaculous power proved by the titue the ne power of the saints to heal the sick,' and the theologians, reliion, the articles rejected by the Lutherans 'They deny nade, and proceeded to demonstrate, after an extraordinary epresented to Francis I that no concession ought to be it new hopes, and hegan a second campugn, which ie antly on foot. When he heard of thus, the King of Prance en taken by the confederates to have a large arms con mr., had joined the evangelical alliance, and steps hul so powerful princes the Dukes of Wurtemberg and Pome The protestants were about to recemble at Smalende, s valued still more highly the spears of the lan quenets rances I he highly appreciated the popes friendship but elp of the pope. But even this argument did not shake the monarch that he could not have Milan without the grillium du licitary bered Willium du licitary ure gentleman like Voré de la l'osse, be selected the mo t anned better than the first. In tead of employing in obto start for Germany. The latter was still more zealous than his master, and fearing he should arrive too late, wrote from Lorraine (where he happened to be staying) to the Elector of Saxony, praying him to prolong the meeting for a few days, "as the King of France had intrusted him with certain propositions touching the peace of Christendom.'* The news of such a mission delighted the friends of the Reformation, and filled the Roman party with indignation. 'Never,' said Sturm, 'never before now has the cause of the Gospel been in such a favorable position in France.'† The elector, Melancthon, and Du Bellay arrived at Smalcalde in the middle of December.

The ambassador of Francis I. immediately demanded a private audience of the elector, and on the 16th December handed him the letters in which the king, with many professions of zeal for the pacification of the Christian Church, besought the elector to co-operate earnestly 'in so pious and holy a work.' I John Frederick was not convinced; he always set religion before policy, but he knew that Francis I. adopted the contrary order. Fearing, accordingly, that behind this pious work, the king concealed war with the emperor, he immediately pointed to the insurmountable barrier which separated them: 'Our alliance,' he said, 'has been formed solely to maintain the pure Word of God, and propagate the holy doctrine of faith.' The diplomatist was not to be baffled: there were two pockets in his portfolio - one containing religious, the other political matters. Opening the former, he said: 'We ask you to send us doctors to deliberate on the union of the Churches.' Germany spoke of ood will be entertuned tonards the princes. * Francis I rance and Germany, and of the unalterable affection and nevent, sacred, and unbroken friendship which united that body, he made use of every plen, and spokn 'of the se king had felt Accordingly, in the letter he addressed In gain this assembly was the essential thing and this ties of the cities to receive the ambassador of Prance ie 13th December was appointed by the princes and depould consult his allies The audience came to an end, and us was characteristic. John Frederick replied that he te Word and doctrine France of union and af the Church BOOK AII THE REPORTATION IN EUROPE.

^{* &#}x27;Ad publicam christianæ reipublicæ pacem spectantibus.' 2d Dec., 1535. Corp. Ref. ii. p. 1015.

[†] Nunquam în meliori loco fuit res Evangelii, quam sit hoc tempore în Gallia.' Sturm to Bucer.

^{‡ &#}x27;Maximopere obtestantes ut pro virili nobiscum incumbatis in tam pium sanctumque opus.' Corp. Ref. ii. p. 1019. Seckendorf says (Hist. Luth.) p. 1146) that this letter had been sent to the Elector beforehand; but in the documents of the State Paper Office at Weimar we read: 'Hæc locutua reddilit principi litteras quas vocant credentiales.' And the Corpus gives in a note the letter we have just quoted.

perstition of men have introduced many useless ceremoem Iake yourelves, ho feels that the negligines and could have desired a little more moderation in some of nvinced that you think very soundly un many things, but nied than the Germans and the Prench? The king is e good of Germany? What nations have ever been more rance? Who has been more prompt to brase dauger for To Emil out and equisbnorth and of fulding thouse oro mices, but they are clearly pointed at Who has been t in another † The French bree not been named, I must pressies, seeing that those monarchs speak in onn way and got to be on their guard when fareign kings send them oved by haired, pretend that the states of the empire nd most excellent princes, he continued, certain persons, steons who desired to stir up the people, ' Most illustrious successive evangelicals put to death by trancis as sectious id when he rese to speak, he described the prous and certained the unfavorable prepossessing of Germany, an he magmed Du Bellay had observed this, be had pe confipt by his nards, but they nere more clear sighted sped that these worthy Germans nauld allow themselves

1. Ot alud agent bus et alud arguifeantibus. Bellait ad principes I i b 1010 * 'Que voluntes, quem amica, quam benesala quam constana' -- Corp. es mito thio Church, but he does ant approve of their suppression without a public decree.* He fears lest a diversity of rites should engender dissension of minds, and be the cause of civil strife throught Christendom. Reconciliation is the dearest of his wishes. If you are willing to receive him into your association, you will find him a sure friend. Diversity of opinion has separated you from him hitherto, but similitude of doctrine will henceforward unite him.'† In conclusion, Du Bellay renewed his demand for a congress of French and German doctors, to confer on the matters in dispute.

2110 - 1914 p. 1012.

This elever oration did not convince the protestants; they had remained cold, while Du Bellay was plending his cause so warmly. The point on which Francis I, and his amba--ador wished to touch lightly was that which the Germans had most at heart. They could not forget what they had heard about Du Bourg and the cripple and other martyrs, prisoners, and fugitives. They were shocked at the idea of entering into alliance with the man who had shed the blood of their brethren. They determined to open their mouths for the dumb, and to support the cause of all such as were appointed to destruction.' 'We will not suffer in our states,' they answered, 'any stirrers-up of sedition, and we cannot, therefore, condemn the King of France for putting them down in his kingdom. But we beseech him not to punish all without distinction. We ask him to spare those who, having been convinced of the errors with which religion is infected, have embraced the pure doctrine of the Gospel, which we ourselves possess. Merciless men, who wish to save their interests and their power, have eruelly defended their impious opinions, and, in order to exasperate the king's mind, have supposed false crimes, which they impute to innocent and pions Christians. It is the duty of princes to seek God's glory, to cleanse the Church from error, and to stop iniquitous cruelties; and we

^{*} Sleidan, Mémoires sur l'État de la Religion et de la République, i. p. 389.

f 'Ut quos diversitas opinionum sejunxerit, similitudo doctrina conjungat.' — Corp. Ref. ii. p. 1013.

most serious aftention to this great duty only.* earnestly desected the mighty King of France to give his hour, probably, because unportant business still demanded the conference as embled they had chosen that early At dispreas t on the 20th of December the members of while to learn the plan concerved by the Preuch government. with her. This explanation is important it is worth our formed, if the protestants consented to enter auto allmuce how far, in the king's opinion, I runce could then be rethe catholic party, but no one knew better than Du Bellay cording to his mister's instructions, as the repre entative of sumed by the minister of 1 rancis 1, nho came formard, accould come to some arrangement. It was no slight tash assecretary The opposing parties were now to try if they - and Spalatin, the elector's chaplam, who was appointed grave of Hesse, - in whose states the conference was held, Sturm, deputy from Strasburg, I the delegates of the Laud-Bellay, Bruch the electoral chancellor, Melancthon, John (20th of December) there should be a meeting hetricen Du consultation (at Smalcalde), it was resolved that next day tremminad t prof of speen made to hold a prelimmany the men of expediency said it was worth looking mio, and, thought that nothing ought to be done, on the other hand, eredulous on the subject of the king's evangelical pietr, not all think alibe. The religious men, who were very mcome to an understanding? The protestants present did to discuss it, if it was certain beforehind that they could not this reform thon Why asemble a congress of learned men The great point n's to know n'ast nould be the nature of firm resolution to labor at the reformation of the Church ject, merely assured the assembly once more of his master's dor nas not disconcerted, but, dexterou-ly cluding the sub-The noble there was not encouraging The ambassa-

t , sap giprealum . - Ong. Ref. it p. 1014 the must not be confounded with I rolessor Sturm who was then * Pfeidan i p 392

their attention. An ambassador from the pope, the famous legate Vergerio, who afterwards came over to the side of the reformers, was then in the town. He had been sent to propose a council, and was to receive the answer of the protestants on the following morning. The delegates having taken their seats, the French ambassador explained what was the nature of the reform to which the kingdom of France would lend a helping hand. 'Firstly,' he said, 'with regard to the primacy of the Roman pontiff, the King of France thinks, as you do, that he possesses it by human, and not by divine, right. We are not inclined to loose the rein too much in this respect. Hitherto the popes have employed the power they claim in making and unmaking kings, which is certainly going too far. True, some of our theologians maintain that the papacy is of divine right; but, when the king asked for proofs, they could not give him any.' Melancthon was satisfied; the chancellor less so; Bruck shared the opinion of the King of England, who, says Du Bellay, 'would not concede any authority to the pope, whether coming from God or from man.'

'As for the sacrament of the Eucharist,' continued the ambassador, 'your opinions on the matter please the king, but not his theologians, who support transmbstantiation with all their might. His Majesty seeks for arguments to justify your way of thinking, and is ready to profess it, if you will give him sound ones. Now you know that the king is the only person who commands in his realm.'*

'As for the mass,' continued Du Bellay, a little uneasy, like a man walking over a quicksand, 'there are great disputes about it. The king is of opinion that many prayers, and silly, impious legends have been foisted into that portion of divine worship, and that those absurd and ridiculous passages must be expurgated, and the primitive order restored.' †

^{* &#}x27;Esse enim solum qui in suo regno imperet.' — Corp. Ref. ii. p. 1015. † 'Orationes et legendas multas ut ineptas et impias abrogandas, aut saltem emendandas; multa enim in his absurda, multa ridicula.' — Ibid. p. 1015.

As Francis I was particularly averse to maless celebrated himself said 'As for me, I am more concerned about his of the intercession of ennia. I am assured that Besenron . boob, written many years ago, in which there is no mention 13 raid a stad I" has gold add ythe saO' amog tadt Du Bellay repeated one or two of the king a expressions on in honor of the saints to ohim their intercection with God, same than dead ones stunes

ready to concede the daily celebration of the Eucharist the silly legends were rejected, the moderate protestants were third for the other worshippers. If timesubstantiation and daybreal, for working men and servants, the second and more than three a day in every parish church, one before preserve the celebration of mass, only there must not be The king thinks, however, added Du Bellig, that we

of the faith and works of those whom they represent, and that they are not set up to be worshipped, but to remind us too the increase of the sames, the king thinks, with you, De Bellny continued -

, His Milesty is also pleased with your opinions on freethat is what the people ought to be taught king gave them some months to prove their decirine by one off the hinds that supply their very life blood? them all opportunity of acquiring nealth and honor, † you most yans after not bus froisgrang nwob tud eitig enoug quetting depends the pryment of masses, indulgences, and Our divines obstinately defend it, he said, for upon that on purgatory, the ambas ador slyly pointed out the reason The discussion - the great struggle in France - turned

Churches and was on the point of being elected popewards Cardinal of the Homan Church endeavored to unite the two * Besarron born at Trebisond in 1305 Greek bushop of Nexa, and after-mad when the king pressed them, they exchanned Scripture, they accepted the terms, but made no answer,

· Ilcu

Sire, do not furnish our adversaries with weapons that they will afterwards turn against us." It therefore appears to me that it would be proper for one of your doctors to write a treatise on the subject and present it to his Majesty.

'As for good works, our theologians stoutly maintain their opinion; namely, that they are necessary. I told them that you thought the same, and that all you assert is, that the necessity of works cannot be affirmed so as to mean that we are justified and saved by them. An inquisitor of the faith has declared his agreement with Melancthon on this point.* I think, therefore, that we may come to an understanding on that matter.

'You do not like monasteries: well! The king hopes to obtain from the Roman party that no one shall be at liberty to take monastic vows before the age of thirty or forty; and that the monks shall be free henceforth to leave their convents and marry, if opportunity offers. The king thinks that not only the good of the Church requires it, but also the good of the State, for there are many capable men in the cloisters who might be usefully employed in divers functions and duties. His Majesty is therefore of opinion, not that monasteries should be destroyed, but that vows should be no longer obligatory. It is by taking one step after another that we shall come to an understanding. is not convenient to pluck off a horse's tail at one pull. Monasteries ought to be places of study, set apart for the instruction of those who are to teach the young. It is useful and even necessary to proceed with moderation. His Majesty hopes to bring the Roman pontiff himself gradually to this idea.

'As for the marriage of priests, the French theologians do not approve of it; but here the king holds a certain medium. He desires the toleration of those of your ecclesiastics who have wives, as for the other, he wishes they should desire to be mainted, let them morry, only they must at the same time quit hely orders.

^{* &#}x27;De fide quoque inquisitorem fidei recte sentire.' — Corp. Ref. ii. p. 1016.

^{&#}x27;Sicut etiam cauda equina non statim et commode tota evelli possit.'—Corp. Ref. ii. p. 1016.

standard for the large hopes to obtain from the one of one or other larder, and to fake the sacrament under one or other larder, and it is consecuted and steaded to be given to the large in Trimes a hundred and twent one given to the large in Trimes a hundred and twent one given to the large in Trimes a hundred and twent of the large of the large of the large of the large of the communities.

best and soundest part of the Church be not conquered and points in his presence. We must take precautions that the learned men were sent to l'rance to discu-s these several plant it. It would please him much, if two or three of your thinks highly of the doctrino of publication, as you exhie-spring of their doctrine, 'The king,' he continued, ers I. admitted the point which they put forward as the very To encourage them still more, be informed them that Fran Lutherans, being in such good compiny, had nothing to fear. were on one side, and the Sorbonne on the other. The according to Du Bellay, prote-tants, bing, cardinals, and popo far to condemn the cardinals and the popo himself. Thus. authority that it not eady eadle you beretich but docs not demned the change. You see the Sorbonne claims such in the brurgy. Tine, the theologians of Paris have conalready substituted psalms for the silly and ungodly bymns of his proposals 'Cardinal Santa Croce,' he said, 'ins bassador bastened to add a few words to prove the sincerity testant delegates were making ready to depart . The amcome time. The day was already advanced, and the prothe exchange of ideas which it had occasioned, occupied This explanation of the reform projected for France, and erushed by numbers.* Lastly, it would be very beneficial,' Du Bellay adroitly added, as he finished his speech, 'if the princes and deputies of the cities here assembled were to intercede in behalf of those who are exiled on account of religion, and to ask that no one should hereafter suffer any injury for what he thinks, says, or does with respect to his faith.'† How could the protestants, after such a compassionate solicitation, speak any more of the scaffolds of the 21st of January?

^{*} Nobes fum admittes. - Ony h.d u. p. 1017 † Sed eitem excitibates, papem quoque spann, condemnars von dubitant." - Ony, fld il p. 1017

Such was the Reformation which Francis I. declared himself willing to give France. As concerns doctrine, it was much more complete than the hybrid system which Henry VIII. was at that time endeavoring to set up in England. The protestants found these propositions acceptable enough in general, with some modifications, doubtless, which could not fail to be introduced: the imperfect reform of the French king would be completed by degrees. Had not his ambassador just said that it was dangerous to pull out a horse's tail at once, giving them to understand that it would be pulled out hair by hair? The Reformation proclaimed, the evangelical doctrine professed, the frivolities of public worship put away, the Sorbonne placed under ban, the sounder part of Christendom preponderating over the more numerous part, -the cardinals and the pope himself (as Du Bellay hinted) aiding in this transformation, - what important advantages! One thing, however, was still wanting: many asked not only whether the catholics would carry out the Reformation to an end, as they hinted, but even whether they would maintain the concessions they had made.

This thought engrossed the attention of the protestant delegates. They made their report, however, to their principals, and amid the doubts by which they were agitated one thing only appeared urgent to the men of the Augsburg ^{* &#}x27;Melior et sanior pars a majore vincatur et opprimatur.' — Corp. Ref. ii. p. 1018.

[†] Nequid fraudi sit auod quisque senserit, dixerit, egerit.' — Corp. Ref. ii. p. 1018.

grab lief il p 1014

bied at Sandeadde conjured has Majosty in States assembled at Emideadde conjured has Majosty to prohibit such mandations are displayed the Majosty to prohibit such and the glory of God.

The corangebeals having dicharged this duty passed 179The corangebeals having dicharged into the unbresculor that the proposal to send learned men into Trance was of that the proposal to send learned men into Trance was or mediate answer, but that the deputes would report there on mediate answer, they exist in the deputes would report the control to the chiefs as soon as they returned home. We assume the assor as they returned home. We assume places are soon as they returned home. We assume the assor as more than to see the decirne of party and the "Varies and "Varies and the assume the assortion are the decirnes on a trace that return and the artifices to inflame the hearts of langs and to annihit at papiets, who clung to their abuses, striving by a thou and ored to do so became objects of the bitterest hatred - the it was necessary to apply a remedy, but the o whe endeav distinction, that idle opinions hasing crept into the Church, truth, desire to not severely against good and had nithout carried away by the cruelty of men who, ignorant of the dom, however, they besought him not to allow himself to be to form a judgment on the pussant monarch of that king-France could not in truth authorize the States of Germany with respect to certain pumishments that had taken place in most northy of so good a preace that the reports erculated Christian zeal with which the lang was animated - a zeal was paramount in their eyes, manifestly showed them the treat concerning matters of faith, the importance of which as connent by his rank, and the duty impo ed on him to by seading them an ambas ador as illustrious by his virtues course soil to guid innecing teom od tadT' and of bies rolloo mto the a sembly of the princes and depunes, the vice-chinber, the French eavoy having been once more admitted draw up the answer to Du Bellay, and on the 22d of Decem brethren in France They commissioned Melancilion to Confession - the duty of interceding in favor of their concord of nations propagated more and more by means in conformity with the Word of God.'*

After a postponement, which seemed almost a refusal, Du Bellay felt embarrassed, for he had still to discharge the principal mission that his master had entrusted to him. He could not, however, leave Smalcalde without fulfilling it. He did not make it known distinctly in his public speeches, but solicited the protestants in private conversations to make an alliance with the king his master. The latter answered that the first condition of such a union would be that the allies should undertake nothing against the emperor, the head of the Germauic Confederation. Now it was precisely for the purpose of acting against Charles V. that Francis I. sought the friendship of evangelical Germany. Du Bellay left Smalcalde dissatisfied.

The distrust of the Lutheran princes was not unreasonable. While the king was acting the protestant beyond the Rhine, he was acting the papist beyond the Alps; if the emperor would consent to yield Milan to him, Francis I. would bind himself to reduce Germany under the yoke of the house of Austria. 'I will spare nothing,' he said, 'for the greatness of the said emperor and his brother the king of the Romans.'† He went further than this: 'Let the pope say the word, and I will constrain England by force of arms to submit to the Church.' The cruel paw peeped out from beneath the skin of the lamb, and the lion suddenly appeared, ready to attack, seize, and devour, as a delicate morsel, those whom he treated as friends and companions.

The cause of truth and unity was not to triumph by means of a congress at Smalcalde, by diplomatic negotiations, or by the instrumentality of Francis I. He who said, My kingdom is not of this world, did not choose men of the world to establish his kingdom, and will not permit a monotonous uniformity to take the place of unity in his empire. Treaties, constitutions, and forms prescribed b.....

^{*&#}x27;Nihil enim optatius quam ut latissime propagetur pia doctrina et multarum gentium concordia.' — Corp. Ref. ii. p. 1026.

[†] Mémoires de Du Bellay, p. 243.

defenencia which the kingdom of hear mides of the proceed from an idea of the control organization, or a pompous the light man idea of the card organizations, works, and the from highlying it, gives it mesting the world was the interest the control of the card will be blessed in Chi obidity and the transition to real, free, crangeloral can be be blessed in Chi obidity neath will be blessed in Chi obidity neath will be blessed in Chi obidity neath will be the company or the control of the card of the card

CHAPTER X

THE GOSTEL IN THE LOT

1519 TO 1536

TITE Reformation had also control of a Az iba knowledge of the ancient suits, and cultivation of the intellation of the intellation to the anomaly to the intellation of the control of the control of the chief. The corruption of the chief the chief of t remedy more keenly felt. Accordingly, although many obstacles appeared to close the peninsula against the entrance of evangelical doctrine; although national pride, the interest which the Italians of every class seemed to have in the continuance of the papacy, the hostility of the govern-ments, and above all the overwhelming power of the pontifical hierarchy, erected barriers everywhere, which seemed more insurmountable than the Alps, there was at that time an electric current between Italy and the reformed countrics that nothing could stop. The Reformation had hardly sent forth its first beams of light, the flame had hardly risen over Germany and Switzerland, when, in the regions beyond the mountains, from Venice and Turin to Naples, isolated spots of light gleamed out amidst the darkness. The evangelical doctrine, in general not much appreciated by the people, found an easy access to the hearts of many cultivated men. Italy was a vast plain, in which were numerous uncultivated fields and barren heaths: but a liberal hand having been opened over it, the seeds of life which fell from it found here and there good soil, and, at the breath of spring, the blade and the ear sprang forth. A fierce storm, mingled with thunder and lightning, afterwards burst upon those fields; the light of day was hidden, and the obscurity of darkness once more covered the country. But the light had been beautiful, and its appearance, although fugitive, deserves to be remembered, if only as a pledge to make us hope for better days. The positive results of the Italian Reformation seem to escape us entirely; and yet it possesses quite as many of those characteristics which charm the mind, captivate the imagination, and touch the heart, as other Reformations do. The new and varied plants which that ancient land began to produce, the brilliant flames which for a moment shed such beautiful light, the men of God at that time scattered all over Italy, deserve to be known, and we must now turn to them.

At Pavia, on the Ticino, there lived a bookseller named Calvi, 'who cultivated the muses.' Frobenius, the celewith the Italian, and to his great horror found the two norks from his seat, took down his Latin Melancthon, compared it tions he fancied be had seen the work before He rose much talked of It soon began to call up certain recollecname Terranigra,t desired to procure the Italian work so who possessed the Latin edition, struck with the unknown a fresh supply A leurned Franciscan of the metropolis, eagerness at Rome, that it soon became necessary to ask for the confessional Terranguas book was read with such those writings must necessarily dissipate the files piety of pecting that the breath of evangeheal piety which animated and cardinals pompously extelled them, none of them sus-Cogelius (Zwingle) and Aretius Felinus (Bucer) Bishops even in the Vatican, along with the works of Corretus ological Commonplaces This admirable book was to be found Melancibon, and these Principles of Divinity were his The was read all over Italy, even in Rome Terrangra nas entitled I principit della I deologia di Ippolito di Terrangra Calvi in the work of dissemination, and before long a book the old easile. Other printers and booksellers joined with the university and beneath the walls of the eathedral or of to controq adt rahnu gages undtoeds asadt gaibrer nass professors and their pupils. The students unght often be and the precious volumes nere first distributed among its cutes of Italy † Parta possessed a celebrated university, only in his immediate neighborhood, but through all the he undertook to circulate the writings of the reformers not to help, in proportion to his ability, in 'the revival of piety," began to study the Gospel more than the poets. Wishing Erasmus's Festament and the early writings of Luther, he brated printer of Basle, having as early as 1519 sent hum and Italian, namely, black easth.

^{#.} Cuput rensecents pretail suppetion ferre . - Frobenius to Luther,

t, Per omnes civicales sparsum '-- Ib d.

T tree onnes everances plasmen — a. t Certeaus Specimen tack in Per words Schwarkerth, Aletanethon, and Terrangra have the same mean ng in German, Greek, were the same. Without delay he made known the stratagem of the booksellers, and the volume, which the cardinals had extolled to the skies one day, was condemned to the flames on the next.

But the propaganda did not cease. The young Germans who came to study law and medicine at Bologna, Padua, and other universities of the peninsula, the young Italians who began to frequent the schools of Germany and Switzerland, helped alike to diffuse evangelical faith beyond the Alps. Many of the Lutheran lansquenets whom Charles V. marched into Italy, and of the Swiss soldiers whom Francis I. drew thither, professed in the houses where they lodged the doctrines of the Reformation, and did so with thorough military frankness. Some praised Luther, others Zwingle, and all contrasted the purity of the reformers' lives and the simplicity of their manners with the irregularities, luxury, and pride of the Roman prelates.

The Italians have an open and quick understanding, precision in their ideas, clearness of expression, an instinct of the beautiful, and great independence of character; and hence they were tired of living in ignoble subjection to ignorant, lazy, and dissolute priests. Conscientious men of eminent mind joyfully welcomed a doctrine which put God's Word in the place of papal bulls, briefs, and decretals, and substituted the spirit and the life for the ecclesiastical mechanism of the Latin ritual. Italy was charmed with Luther's character and work. In 1521 a voice from Milan exclaimed: 'O mighty Luther! who can paint thy features so full of animation, the godlike qualities of thy mind, thy soul inspired with a will so pure? Thy voice, which rings through the universe and utters unaccustomed sounds, terrifies the vile hearts of the wicked,* and bears an unexpected balm to diseases which appeared beyond remedy. Take

^{* &#}x27;Vocis, quæ totum penitus diffusa per orbem, Terruit insolito pectora tetra sono.'

These verses have been preserved by Schelhorn in his Amanitates Eccl. ii. p. 624.

Breef to the Inquisitors, Es; nald ad annum. ettam ecclesiasticas et regulares, tam mendicantes quam non mendicantes ' Pestifera hæresis Luthers non tentu upi t axculares personas sed than ever Hereules rent in pieces' tion known to all, and whose word desiroys more monsters contrige, then, venerable father, whose mouth makes salv t-

tagion thenceforward made still more rapid progre s by Bruccioli, printed at Venice, and the much dreaded con-In that very year (1530) the New Testament nas translated bas to suffer the cruellest assults. The cry was usele s Heresy is mereasing, and in every place the catholic faith only among the lasty, but also among the pressis and monks . Puther's pestilential here-y has been spread among ue, not uttered a cry of terror 'To our exceeding corrow, he said, his dear Italy and threatened the nalls of the papacy He him and his legates in distant countries firoke out all over great alarm, when all of a sudden the doctrine, attacked by principles were taught at the churches. Clement VII felt were enlightened, and the Reformation took a new step 143 an the Papal States Before long, several praests and monbs of the Roman Church in private houses this was done even by degrees to explain the Gospel and to refute the errors ans increased every day † The converted critiolies begon still more prompt than the Germans the number of Lutherthat was to take place. The Italians showed themselves in what they have once adopted * It was rather the contrary they soon abandon it, while the Italians obstuntely persist claimed 'The Germans take up a new opinion quickly, but At the diet of Muremberg in 1924, Cardinal Campeggi ex The dignituries of Rome were alarmed at this enthusiam than Venice, the winged hon of St. Mark braved the priest in Europe more Jealous of its independence and authority of the Gospel first raised its standard. There was no power the lagunes of the queen of the Adrante, that the doctrine It was in this latter city, on the hundred islets and anni-

^{*} Sechendorf Hat du l'udicraname p 613

t Sarps II at du Concile de Trente 1 p So

of Rome; the senate rejected the Inquisition, practised freedom of inquiry, and did not license the pope's edicts until after serious study and strict examination. Protestants were soon to be found at Venice who, strange to say, were more protestant than those of Augsburg. 'I am delighted,' said Luther, on the 7th of March, 1528, 'to hear that they have received the Word of God at Venice.' * A report having got abroad that Melanethon appeared inclined, at the diet of 1530, to recognize the primacy of the Bishop of Rome, the new evangelicals of Venice were troubled and alarmed: one of them, Lucio Paolo Rosselli, although only a beginner in the Christian doctrine, determined to write, respectfully but frankly, to the illustrious doctor of Germany: 'There are no books by any author,' he said to Melancthon, 'which please me more than those you have published. But if the reports which the papists circulate about you are true, the cause of the Gospel and those who, taught by the writings of yourself and Luther, have embraced it, are in great danger. All Italy awaits the result of your meeting at Augsburg.† O Melancthon! Ict neither threats, nor fears, nor prayers, nor promises make you desert the standard of Jesus Christ! Even if you must suffer death to maintain his glory, do not hesitate. It is better to die with honor than to live with ignominy.

It was much worse when the Venctian ambassador at the court of Charles V. forwarded to the senate the letter which Melanethon had written on the 6th of July to Cardinal Campeggi, and in which he went so far as to say that the protestants did not differ from the Roman Church in any important dogma, and were disposed to acknowledge the papal jurisdiction.‡ The evangelical Christians of Venice, who wanted a decided position, were dismayed. Most of

^{* &#}x27;Læte audio de Venetis quod Verbum Dei receperint.' — Luther, Ep. iii. p. 289.

[†] Scias igitur Italos omnes expectare Augustensis hujus vestri decreta.' Venetiis, 3 calend. Aug. anno 1530. Corp. Ref. ii. p. 227.

[‡] Corp. Ref. ii. p. 170.

The works of the reformers had teached Murin Pied mont, from its riemry to Surizerland, Liance, and Germann, were among the first to receive a glimpe of the sum which had just race beyond the Ale. — the Richim and heady appeared in one of its coine, — at Aosta, — an most of its doctrines had for ages been current among the Waldensan valleys Alonks of the Augustine contain at Turn, Herenous Nigro Position in printedly, act Turn, therefore the Augustine contains a Turn, therefore the Augustine for the Augustical transfer of the Augustic Au not like a engle erreer whose deep rud mighty naters, as they showed along, ran enlinky in the same channel, but like bryght and limpted writers giutered in the sunbeam and fer intract the soil around them. They disappeared, they were lost in the ground, oftentiones alia! unpruring to it a san four in the ground, oftentiones alia! unpruring to it a san Yet many a plant lind been revived by them, and their sweet remembrance may still eruse joy to others, Melancibon had carried his conces ions too far. When he declared, however, that he would not recognize the slebop of Rome until he heezane evangehen, he had put a subulation tradered it impossible. But our Yenico ne pass to Turn. The Linhan revival did not present that simple distoried and continuous advance not present that simple distoried and continuous advance.

which we meet with m other European countries. It was

Mper seemed impossible to the Italians was but too true practices of the enemy

them denied that the letter was Melancthons, Rosselli in priticular, with generous enthusias, took up the dectors defence, and on the lat of August sent him a copy of the letter, to the end that he unght carefully scrutimize the wickedness of those who nerinded to him words calculated to disgrace the true defenders of the cause of Christ and Christ the Wenchian, 'resist their inquity with greater and Christ lie the emperor and all Christian dusty with greater zeal, and he the capeers of the cause of the shameless are the contract of the shameless of the enemy.

among the number of those who first became familiar with the evangelical writings. Celio Secundo Curione, a young man still at college, received them from their hands in 1520.

About three leagues and a half from Turin, and at the foot of the Alps, was situated the town of Cirié, with its two parochial churches and an Augustine monastery. Higher up there stood an old castle named Cuori, and the family to which it belonged was called from it Curione or Curioni.* One of its members, Giacomino Curione, who lived at Cirié, had married Charlotte de Montrotier, lady of honor to Blanche, Duchess of Savoy, and sister to the chief equerry of the reigning duke. On the 1st of May, 1503, a son was born to them at Cirié; he was named Celio Secundo,† and was their twenty-third child.‡ He lost his mother as he came into the world, and his father, who had removed to Turin, and afterwards to Moncaglieri, where he had property, died when Celio was only nine years old.

The elder Curione possessed a Bible, which in the hour of death he put into his son's hands. That act was perhaps the cause of the love for Scripture by which the heir of the Curiones was afterwards distinguished: the depth of his filial piety made him look upon the book as a treasure before he knew the value of its contents. Celio having begun his education at Moncaglieri, went to Turin, where his maternal grandmother, Maddalena, lived. She received him into her house, where the anxious love of the venerable lady surrounded him with the tenderest care. He is said to have dwelt on that pleasant hill which overlooks Turin, whence the summits of the Alps are visible, and whose base

^{*} Celio Secundo writes his name both ways, but more frequently Curioni.

^{† &#}x27;Natus anno MDIII. calendis Maii, Cyriaci Taurinorum.' — Curionis Historia a Professore Stupano, 1570, in Schelhorn, Amenitates Litterariæ, xiii. p. 330.

^{‡ &#}x27;Vicenos ternosque liberos suscepit, ex quibus Cœlius ultimus natus fuit.' — Curionis Historia, p 329.

^{§ &#}x27;Taurinum se contulit, ubi per aliquos annos apud Magdalenam proavam suam agens.' — Curionis Historia, p. 330.

* Bonnet, Recuts d's sertieme Siecle p 243

before his soul letters and philosophy, - the norld of the spirit, - opened his father could do thus a new world, superior to that of literature was meapable of satisfying. The old Bible of he reached his twentieth year he felt deeper longings, n luch classical orators, poets, historians, and philosophers, when Celio had applied with his whole heart to the study of the *o'l sais to existen out stem ban wole sais yd bedenw et who has received Christian liberty from God But Celio nor pope has any right to command de potically the believer Word, and those in which he asserts that neither bishop which the Christin ought to ching to the promises of Gods m which the Saxon doctor speaks of the hyely faith with may eagerly to his study He read those vigorous prges Italian under a different title The young man carried it lent him Luther's Badylonian Captivity, tran lated mio reformers, Curione asked for them, and Pather Hieronimo Knowing that they poseesed come of the natings of the ardent thirst for religious knowledge, interested the monks. grace of his person, the quickness of his intellect, and his Wittemberg, some truly pious men were to be found The known in the Augustine convent in which as in that of read their works' † It would appear that he was already himself 'I will not condemn those doctors before I have of joining in this almost unanimous censuite, Celio said to disposed in favor of the recused than of the accusers. Instend around him, and his generous nadependent spirit was more He possesed a nobler soul than the majority of the people gle He helened to their abuse, but was not convinced are of the baselest language againg Luther and Zwin planning of the 'false doctrines' of those heretics, and mak often heard certran practs and their partisans butterly comcity, of the Reformation and the reformers Curions had There was much talk just then, both in university and had not yet obtained light enough; he carried the book back to the convent, and asked for another. Melancthon's Principles of Theology and Zwingle's True and False Religion were devoured by him in turn.

A work was then going on in his, soul. The truths he had read in his Bible grew clearer and sank deeper into his mind; his spirit thrilled with joy when he found his faith confirmed by that of these great doctors, and his heart was filled with love for Luther and Melancthon. 'When I was still young,' he said to the latter afterwards, 'when first I read your writings, I felt such love for you that it seemed hardly capable of increase.'*

Curione was not satisfied with the writings merely of these men of God: his admiration for them was such that he longed to hear them: an ardent desire to start immediately for Germany was kindled in his heart.† He talked about it with his friends, especially with Giovanni and Francesco Guarino, whom the Gospel had also touched, and who declared their readiness to depart with him.

The three young Italians, enthusiastic admirers of Luther and Melanethon, quitted Turin and started for Wittenberg. They turned their steps towards the valley of Aosta, intending to cross the St. Bernard, where for more than five centuries a house of the Augustine order had existed for the reception of the travellers who made use of that then very frequented pass. They conversed about their journey, their feelings, and their hopes; and not content with this, they spoke of the truth with simple-hearted earnestness to the people they met with on the road or at the inns. In the ardor of their youthful zeal, they even allowed themselves to enter into imprudent discussions upon the Romish doc-

^{* &#}x27;Adolescens adhuc, cum prima tua monimenta legissem, te ita amavi ut vix ulterius progredi meus in te amor posse videretur.' — C. S. Curionis, Epist. i. p. 71.

^{† &#}x27;Ita est illa (opera) admiratus ut statim decreverit in Germaniam transire.' — Curionis Ilistoria, p. 331.

t 'Institutum iter per Salassorum regionem ingreditur.' - Ibid.

trince. They were 'burshing to speak'—they could not want until they had cro-seed the Alps the spirit with which they were filled carried them wany. They had been cautiory and had been cautiored the hidnes places in the bearte of men, and a reformer, 'their tongues betrry their holden affections.'† One of Moss with whom these Predmontese youths had debated of went and denounced them to Bondlace Cardinal bribop of Treat, and grounded them to Bondlace Cardinal bribop of Prist. gave the necessary orders, and just as the three suitents never entering the salley of Aosta,; the cardinals eathering who were waiting for them, lad hold of them and cardinals are desired them to prist of the salley of Aosta, the cardinals are the salley of the salley of Aosta, the cardinals are the salley of the salley of the salley of them and cardinals.

evangeheal zeal. traveller, they afterwards became distinguished by their soon released although less celebrated than their fellow-Benignus It is probable that Cornelio and Guarino were studies, and with that intent placed him in the priory of St to bear the necessary expenses for the continuation of his Roman Church He loaded him with attentions, promised mind, he resolved to do all he could to attach bim to the with the extent of his knowledge and the elegance of his covered that his prisoner was not an ordinary man. Struck in his behalf. The cardinal having sent for him, soon dis triving to inform them of his fate, they exerted themselves that district who belonged to the bigher nobility, and conan ebnerif beese eoq eneruO insumment gratiles bar Melancthon and Luther, they found themselves in chains dun servoorstar boniaries or an lo etaglish out gartagoitae What a disappointment! At the very time they were

Although shut up in a monratery, Currone's soul burnt with zeal for the Word of God He regretted that Germany

nentibus disputeres in timere, minus caute de redus ad rel gronem perti

t, Cum essent vallem pratonam ingressure -- Curona Hutores p.

on which he had so much reckoned, and unable to increase his light at the altar of Wittemberg, he wished at least to make use of what he had for the benefit of the monks commissioned to convert him. He was grieved at the superstitions practices of their worship, and would have desired to enfranchise those about him. A shrine, put in a prominent place on the altar, enclosed a skull and other bones reported to be those of St. Agapetus and St. Tibur the martyr, and which during certain solemnities were presented to the adoration of the people. Why set dry bones in the place which should be occupied by the living Word of God? Are not their writings the only authentic remains of the apostles and prophets? Curioue refused to pay the slightest honor to these relies, and in his private conversation he went so far as to speak to some of the monks against such idolatrous worship, instructing them in the true faith.* He resolved to do something more. In the convent library he had found a Bible, to which no one paid any attention; he had, moreover, noticed the place where the monks kept the key of the shrine they held so dear. † One day probably in 1530 - taking advantage of a favorable opporfimity when the monks were occupied elsewhere. I he went into the library, took down the haly Word of which David said it was more to be desired than gold, carried it into the church, opened the mysterious coffer, removed the relies, put the Bible in their place, and laid this inscription upon it: 'This is the ark of the covenant, wherein a man can inquire of the true oracles of God, and in which are contained the true relics of the saints.' Curione, with emotion and joy, closed the shrine and left the church without being The act, rash as it was, had a deep and evangelical meaning: it expressed the greatest principles of the Reformation. Some time after, at one of the festivals when

^{* &#}x27;Privatim multos contraria hisce docebat et in vera tide erudiebat.' - Curionis Historia, p. 332.

^{† &#}x27;Itaque, observato clavium loco, capsam aperit.' - Ibid. p. 333.

t 'Cum cæteri aliis rebus intenti essent.' - Ibid.

* The complus aders; conceledatu, sique ena nortues upos serve.

† Es uxeren dederunh Marganiam Biancam, puellam elegants-

Some time after this, Curones, believing that he had nothing more to kear, and destring to receive his pairmony, to revisit his nibre country, and to devote his strength and deappointed. Cruel family rexamons and elected persecutions as a sailed in his lapter were the received to the strength presecutions and advantage from against the library restained in his lapter was a sailed a his lapter and regulation. He then a seal of the pair and the particular and the par beauty, who became the faithful and brave companion of his their daughters, Margarita Branca, a young woman of great best families in the protince, gave him the hand of one of tify a proper grattindo to Cello, and the Isacios, one of the As soon as the scourge abated, every one was erger to te come the living root of his soul, bad in ide it a fruitful tree. he was eiger to console every misery 'Christ having be Jesus had come to seree, and following his Master s example, secured to be living for works only He remembered that strugging for faith only, in the midst of the pestilence, be buried the dend " In the convent, he had appeared to be minch adorned their churche, consoled the dying, and even to sell for the relief of the nretched the precious objects licited the donations of the nobility, prevailed on the priests himself wholly in succorning the poor and the sich, he sopestilence were westing the country, he soon after occupied whole heart to works of Christian charity As famine and meaning practices of the monks, he gave hunself with his ing, but, being at the same time disgusted with the un-In that city Curone zenlously devoted him elf to lectur-

the relies were to be pre-eated to the ridortion of the worse shippers, the monks opened the elurne Their eurpres, emotion, and rage were boundless, and they at once accused their young companion of -acrilege Being on the watch, he made has escape, and, quitting Pradmont, took relige at Millian had lost all but one sister, whose husband, learning that he intended claiming his inheritance, determined to ruin him. A Dominican monk was making a great noise by his sermons in a neighboring city.* Celio took a book from his library, and went with some friends to hear him. He expected that the monk, according to the custom of his class, would draw a frightful picture of the reformers. Curione knew that the essence of the preaching of the evangelical ministry was Christ, justification by faith in his atoning work, the new life which He imparts, and the new commandments which He gives. According to him, the task of the servant of God, now that all things were made new, was to exalt, not the Church, but the Saviour; and to make known all the preciousness of Christ rather than to stun his hearers by furious declamations against their adversaries. Such were not the opinions entertained at that time - we will not say by the great doctors of the Romish Church, but by the vulgar preachers of the papacy. Laying down as a fundamental principle that there was no salvation out of the Church, they naturally believed themselves called to urge the necessity of union - not with Christ, but - with Rome; to extol the beauties of its hierarchy, its worship, and its devout institutions. Instead of feeding the sheep, by giving them the spiritual nourishment of faith, they thought only of pronouncing declamatory eulogies of the fold and drawing horrible pictures of the devouring wolves that were prowling about it. If there had been no protestants to combat, no Luther or Calvin to calumniate, many popish preachers would have found the sermon a superfluous part of the service, as had been the case in the Middle Ages.

The good monk, whom Curione and his friends had gone to hear, preached according to the oratorical rules of vulgar preachers. 'Do you know,' he exclaimed, 'why Luther pleases the Germans? . . . Because, under the name of Christian liberty, he permits them to indulge in all kinds and that He was not born of a virgin' And continuing of excess * He teaches, moreover, that Christ is not God,

^{* &#}x27;In vicinum locum, Castelleviolonem nomine.' - 1bid.

- asH ebrow was a yes of moseumraq tor stangard any odw When the sermon was over, Curione asked the prelate the anmosty of his herrers this monkish phihppic with great vehemence, he inflamed taliant evangelist was seized, taken to Turin, thrown into and wide, and spread the configration everywhere ung to blow in the pennant, would scatter the sparks for ly, the impetuous wind which, crossing the Alps, was begin-Church, and they felt that if they did not quench it in tant-Currone was a firebrand flung by Satan into the midst of the quiestore looked upon it as a revolt against the papercy This scene made a great noise. The bishop and the in t banes has said and base ban and success of eldeort upon bru sidenosest stom off. mul Aserts bus mid noqu the Dominican's having told them such impudent hes, rushed people went still further, some violent men, exasper ited by persons of rank present at the service were diegusted, the demonstrated the falseness of the monk's calumnes tians, he read aloud several passages which completely trary. And opening Luthers Commentary on the Galahook where the Wittemberg doctor has said the very conwith indignation 'Then I will tell you at once the page and would show him the passages The young man rejoined then, but if Curione would accompiny him to Turn, be broach hung, The mont replied that he could not do so place in which he teaches the things with which you reons charges against Luther can you tell me the book or the pectant, he said 'Reverend father, you have brought sern ing obtained it, and the congregation being eitent and ex prison, and in a moment, as soon as the news circulated, all ^{+ &#}x27;Ut vix intercedente Priefecto, vivus Taumnum redue pomerne"-Generia lib d nes concederet - Cursons II dorsa * Luiberum Germania placere quod sub libertate christiana omnia his old enemies set to work. His corcious brother, and even his sister, as it would appear, made common cause with the priests to destroy him.* Fanatieism and avarice joined together; one party wished to deprive him of his property only, but the others wanted his life. It was not the first time Curione had been in prison for speaking according to the truth: he did not lose courage, he preserved all the serenity of his mind, and remained master of himself. The eeelesiastic charged with the examination overwhelmed him with questions.† He was reminded of the relies taken away from the monastery of St. Benignus, the journey he had wished to take to Germany, and the eonversations he had held on the road, and was threatened with the stake.‡

Curious Historia P 339

The bishop, knowing that Curione had protectors among the first people in the city, started for Rome, in order to obtain from the pope in person his condemnation to death. Before leaving, he transferred the prisoner to his coadjutor David, brother of the influential cardinal Cibo. David, wishing to make sure of his man, and to prevent its being known where he was detained, removed him by night from the prison in which he had been placed, took him to one of those mansions, not very unlike castles, that are often to be found in Italy, and locked him up in a room enclosed by very thick walls.§ His officers attached heavy chains to poor Celio's feet, riveted them roughly, and fastened them into the wall; and finally, two sentries were placed inside the door of the house. When that was done, David felt at ease, sure of being able to produce his prisoner when the eondemnation arrived from Rome. There was no hope left the wretched man of being saved. Curione felt that his death eould not be far off; but though in great distress he still remained full of eourage.

The different operations by which David had secured his ^{* &#}x27;In causa propemodum ipsi fuerunt (soror et maritus) quod captus fuerit, vitam quoque fere amiserit.' — Curionis Historia, p. 336.

^{† &#}x27;Hic examinatur, quæstiones adhibentur.' - Ibid. p. 339.

t 'Ignem flammasque minantur.' - Ibid. p. 339.

^{§ &#}x27;Ex prioribus carceribus noctu deducit, et in conclavi quodam fortissimis parietibus munito . . . asservari curat.' — Ibid.

and begged him to leave one of his feet at bherty, adding as usual to bring him food, Curione spoke to him of his pain, and the anguish became untolerable. When his keeper came had riveted the fetters so tightly that his feet began to swell recalled from these thoughts by a feeling of pain his jailers staircase, the door, and the wiedows * But ere long he was exactly the arrangement of the building, the galleries, the been the house of some friend He called to remembrance been in that house, in that very room -- it had probably grees remembered that once upon a tune, when a boy, he had to examine or ery thing about him more earefully, and by deto his memory certain half-effaced recollections He began came, Currone looked round him; the place seemed to bring prisoner and been carried on during the night, when the day BOOK AU THE REPORMATION IN EUROPL occurred to his mind was singular possibly it might not upon him He reflected and planned, the expedient which once again, of again serving the cause of the Go-pel, flashed myentive mind, the hope of ecaping, of seeing his dear the violence of murderers? An idea suddenly crossed his a doubt. But was it not lawful to defend one's life agranat ananted Curione on the bishop's return. of that he had not with the blood of the saints and martyrs of Jesus' De ith the seven lulls, he exclumed 'Babylon' . . . drunken ered at Rome. When St. John saw the woman serted on on in the Church He knew what sentence would be delittu that great work of revival a hich God was then everying children, or his friends again, he could no longer take part most settous reflections. He should never see his wife, his This circumstance did not prevent him from making the enced by turns severe pans and occasional relief days passed in this way, during which the prisoner experiagain and set the other free The man consented, and some that, when that was bealed, the jailer could chain it up

Cheroma Historia - muite muitreq eumob muralugue mernomem al supiestosi * the hands of his persecutors. When Peter was in pri on succeed, but it might also be the means of evening hum from the angel of the Lord opened the door and led him out. Celio did not expect a miraele; but he thought it was man's duty to do all in his power to thwart the counsels of the ungodly. He was not, however, very sanguine of success. God holds the lives of his children in his hand; the Lord will restore him to liberty or send him to the scaffold, as He shall judge best.

Curione delayed no longer: he proceeded at once to carry out the curious and yet simple expedient which had occurred to his lively imagination. He took the boot off his free leg and stuffed it with rags; * he then broke off the leg of a stool that was within his reach, fastened the sham foot to it, and contrived a wooden leg which he fixed to his knee, in such a way that he could move it as if it were a real leg. His Spanish robe, reaching down to his heels, covered everything, and made the matter easier. Presently he heard the footsteps of his jailers: luckily, everything was ready. They entered, did what they were accustomed to do every day, loosed the chained foot, and then, without examining too closely — for they had no suspicious — they put the fetters on the sham leg, and went away.

Celio was free; he rose, he walked; surprised at a deliverance so little expected, he was almost beside himself... he was rescued from death. But all was not over; he had still to get out of that strong mansion, where so close a watch was kept over him. He waited until night, and when darkness brooded over the city and his keepers were sunk in sleep, he approached the door of the chamber. The jailers, knowing that the prisoner was chained to the wall, and that sentinels were posted at the outer gate, had only pushed it to without locking it. Curione opened it, and moved along with slow and cautious steps, avoiding the slightest noise for fear of giving the alarm. Although it was quite dark, he easily found his way by the help of his memory: he groped his course along the galleries, descended the starrs, but on reaching the door of the house, he found it closely short. What has to be done now? The short were asleep, but he dreed not make any none leve he should wrote asleep, but he dreed not make any none leve he should rather high on one side of the door, he contrived to reach rather high on one side of the door, he contrived to reach the first high into the court parts, scaled the outer wall, kill mo the street, and begrue to seek for a huding place as frast as his wounded feet would permit him * When the morning came, there was great supprise and agintation in the house of the paiders were not suspected and as no one cound explain the prisoner's flight, his encomes circulated the could explain the prisoner's flight, his encomes circulated the report of the prisoner's flight, his encomes circulated the report of the paid and recourse to mage to save immedit at Turin was teaching quiedly at Paria, it issued an arrest last that the daring beretic who had escaped from his prison dience The inquisition, for a time at fault, di covered at of Pavis, where he was soon surrounded by an admiring an sequestered village They got him invited to the university unwilling that such the talents should remain buried un a lighted with his amablo character and cultivated mind, 4.278 friends, who made his requirintance, and all of them, dehim, recognized him, he spoke of him to others of his a high opinion of him One of them, happening to meet villas near the lonely house which he inhabited, entertained Milanese gentlemen who came to pass the smomer in the man of letters had spread through that country, and certain Milan, where his family joined him. His reputation as a Turin, and took refuge in a secluded village is the duchy of was sufficient to frustrate its plots. He hastened to leave however keen the hatred of the world, a breath of hersen and severely too, the power of his enemies, but he saw that m his eyes the greatness of his deliverance. He had felt, support the bishop had gone to selicit, still further megnified the terrible condemnation of the sovereign pontiff, whose escaped not only from the hands of his guards, but also from Currone himself nas eurprised. The thought that he had from death against him, being determined to put an end to the havassing wurfare which this independent man was waging against the darkness of the Middle Ages. The familiars of the Holy Office lay in ambush with the intention of seizing the Piedmontese professor as he was leaving his house to go to the lecture-room. But the plot got wind; the students, who were very numerous, supported by some of the chief people of the town, formed a battalion which surrounded Curione as he left his house, conducted him to the Academy, and when the lecture was over, escorted him home again.* Public opinion declared itself so strongly in favor of liberty of teaching and against Romish tyramny, that three years clapsed without the inquisitors being able to seize the professor, which caused great joy all over the city. The pope, irritated at such resistance, threatened to excommunicate the senate of Pavia; and Curione, unwilling to imperil his friends, quitted that town for Venice, whence he proceeded to Ferrara to live under that culightened protection which the Duchess Renée extended to all who loved the Gospel.

^{* &#}x27;Extrahit caligam pedis liberi, eamdem lineis quibusdam pannis infarcit.' — Curionis Historia, p. 341.

Ferrara was in truth a centre where the Gospel found a firm support. Renée, who was daughter of Louis XII., and would have succeeded him if (as she used to say) 'she had had a beard on her chin,' had inherited, not the catholic ardor of her mother, Anne of Brittany, but the reforming and anti-popish spirit of her father, who had taken for his device: Perdam Babylonis nomen. Deprived of the throne by 'that accursed Salie law' - to use her own words - but brought up at the court of Francis I., she was closely attached to her cousin Margaret, and although her junior by eighteen years, had eagerly embraced the Gospel which that 'elder sister' had preached to her with so much earnestness. Renée was not one of those people who are simply the disciples of others. Less beautiful than Margaret, she resembled her in possessing a great soul, a generous heart, and, more than that, a sound judgment and firm will. While clouds gailered round the mid and brilium luminary which presided over the desinnes of Navitre and obsoured the end of its course, haidly a presing rapor dimined for an instent

^{*} Magna studiosorum caterva, eum a sua domo in auditorium deducebat, et ex eo iterum domum comitabatur.' — Curionis Historia, p. 343.

There shad been a find of marying Renée, as there had been a find of marying Renée, as there had been a find of marying Renée, as there been of marying Margared, to Charles V, and dso to Henry VIII, but the politic Francis had preferred gyring in predecessor's daughter to a prince who would cause him no umbrage. She was therefore married to Herenles of Estar, Bridson on Grope Alexander VI by Lucrezin Borgia, and vassal of the Holy See. Such gloomy miccocdents did not promise a sympathetic mnon to the fraud of Margyret of Valous fraud of Margyret of Valous.

the she only menered " Whit would you have? - they her household represented to her the excessive expen e of sand of her fellow countrymen. And when the stenards of erybody, it was said, 'in one year she as isted ien thouthought unjustly treated. 'She desires to do good to evgoodness filled her with compassion for those whom she among Roman catholics, it was because her mexhaustible that if she came to the aid of certain persons in bid odor to investigate religious questions, they added, however, abled her to excel in philosophy, inclined her, unfortunately, rents of the papacy complained that her intellect, which en were agreed as to her extreme beneficence, but the adheto be the object of the most opposite remarks. All who had been driven out of France She was thus beginmen of Italy, and particularly nelcomed the evangelicals turn, she loved to attract to her small court the learned ing with her active character, she had rather a practical tical spirit. A contemplative life, however, nas not in keep at this period of her life a slight trace of Margaiets my tiand seek 'the one thing needful' There wis in her piety and art, and loved rbove everything to retire to her closet of a court, Renée debglited in the associations of literature are poor people of my own country, all of whom would be my subjects but for that wicked Salic law!"'* She was at once a Macenas and a Dorcas.

^{*} Mambourg Historic du Calenname, be 1 p 61

The time had gone by in Italy when the fanaticism of pagan antiquity had misled the mind, and preachers were to be heard speaking from the pulpit of Minerva, Christ, and Jupiter in the same breath. At the very moment when celebrated professors, commissioned to teach philosophy even at the university of Ferrara, were exclaiming, as Voltaire and others did after him: 'Christianity is dying out, and its end is near!' Christianity on the contrary was reviving at Wittemberg, Zurich, Cambridge, and even in France, and the cry which it uttered as it issued from the tomb, re-echoed through Italy and awoke many souls there. In 1528, and perhaps earlier, the evangelical doctrines had In 1530, the inquisition been professed at Ferrara. of that city wrote to the pope, that there were many Lutherans, both laymen and eeclesiastics, within its walls. † In fact, the duchess was calling round her, either for the education of her children, or simply for love of learning and the Gospel, professors skilled in the study of the classics, among whom were men enlightened about the superstitions of the Roman Church, and often sincerely attached to the Gospel. Of their number were Celio Calcagnini, Lilio Giraldi Bartholomeo Riccio, Marzello Palingenio, and the two brothers Giovanni Sinapi in particular was full of zeal to spread around him the doctrine of the Scriptures. Many of the most eminent men of Italy, such as Curione, Occhino, Peter Martyr, and the famous poet Flaminio, lived for a time at Ferrara. From that centre evangelical doctrines were propagated in the neighbouring cities; and particularly in Modena, where they spread so widely in the university and among the townspeople, that it was soon called .the Lutheran city. I t 'Città lutherana.' - Poli, Epist. iii. p. 84.

^{*} Varillas, Histoire des Hérésies, ii. p. 499. Brantôme, Dames Illustres.

[†] P. Martyr Vermigli, par C. Schmidt, p. 11.

CHAPTER XIX

THE GOSPEL IN THE CENTRE OF ITALT

(3524 or 9231)

WHLE Vence, Turn, Milan, Perrara, Modena, and other cites of Upper Indy were hatening to the voice of the Cospel, the centre and south of the pennania had also their witnesses to the fruith.

covenant, but manifestly forbidden under the new, and thus mopportunely defended customs tolerated under the old sente and equivocal expressions concerning them was found in the latter part of his life employing oband without denying the essential doctrines of faith, be bimself to de-cend to trifles and even to contradictions, trine was neither deep nor extensive, he cometimes allowed little Greek and no Hebrew his knowledge of Christian docastray on the road His studies were imperfect, he knew beatenly paradise. He determined to win it, but went degrammer of my life, he said, ' I had a great longing for the was moved himself, he moved his hearers. From the very ure all thoughts, he had strong religious cravings and as ho spirits who search into all knowledge, and weigh and merswho listen to it. Without being one of the e firm, solid boldness of language which surprises and carries away those was not void of imagination or enthusiasm, and possessed a ness, grace, and facility of style, but at the same time he of words and those turns of expression which produce clear-In his sermons were to be found that elegance, that choice older than Calvin, was the most famous preacher of the age. younger than Luther and Zwingle, and twenty-one years Bernardino Occhino, born at Sienna in 1487, four years drew down much affliction on his old age. Occlino was a great orator, but not a great divine.

Sienna, the rival of Florence in the Middle Ages, still possessed sufficient attractions to induce a young man to follow the career of letters or of honors; but Occlino's mind took another direction. From his earliest youth, his religious feelings had inclined him to an ascetic life, and he sought peace for his soul in exercises of devotion. 'I believe in salvation through works, he said, 'through fasting, prayer, mortifications, and vigils. With the help of God's grace we can, by means of these practices, satisfy the justice of God, obtain pardon for our sins, and merit heaven.'* Erelong his private macerations proved insufficient for him, and he became a monk. Every religious society approved of by Rome was holy in his eyes; but he joined the Observantine Franciscans, because that order was reputed to be stricter than the others. The youthful Bernardino soon found, like Luther, that the life of the cloister could not satisfy his need of holiness. He was discouraged, and, renouncing the pursuit of an object which he seemed unable to attain, he turned to the study of medicine, without however, leaving the convent. Some Franciscans, having separated from the order with the intention of forming a still stricter rule, under the name of Capuchins, Occhino thought he had, found what he wanted, and, having joined them, gave himself up with all his strength to voluntary humiliation and the mortification of the senses. Eat not, touch not, taste not. If any new and stricter laws were drawn up by the chiefs of the order, he hastened to conform to them. He threw himself blindfold into a complicated labyrinth of traditions, disciplines, fastings, mortifications, austerities, and ecstasies. And when they were over, he would ask himself whether he had gained anything? Remaining ill at ease and motionless in his cell, he would exclaim: 'O Christ! if I am not saved now, I know not what I can do more!' The moment was approaching when he would feel that all these macerations tradictory views, but, do what he would, Rome and the Christ' He tried for some time to reconcile the e con given by grice, because of the redemption through Je us by our works, while Scripture tells me that heaven is mind 'I believe,' he said, 'that we must ment beaven alyzęd him. A striling contrast prezented itself to his him at the very outset, made him unersy, and even par-Scripture, metend of making his nork easier, embarrassed mons, and began to study the Bible But, strange to say, He felt the necessity of conscientionaly preparing his sercreased his darkness the Word was to bring him light. brouched the Holy Scriptures Monneire discipline had in nces and pairry bonds of the monks and devotees, and ap m his thoughts. He turned away from the supersitious prac tered upon a new phase of hie, a revolution was also effected called him to the functions of the pulpit, and as he thus en heart, his superiors, wishing to turn his grifts to account, his sermons, with those pathetic impulses which touch the The aguations of his soul often mapired him, during This was in 1534, when Occhino was forty seven years were but 'tunnug knots, which bad at first and etrangle at Erelong a new light broke upon hun, n heavenly brightconfidence, and made every exertion to understind them must be in God's Book. He read its holy pages with entire edy for the disease under which he felt himself sufferng it the path to heaven, and that if there was anywhere a rem of Christendom, the Scriptures nere given by God to show He said to himself that, according to the univeral opinion Then he turned once more to what he had abandoned all in vain peace was a stranger to bis soul scruples. He applied again to his mortifications. It was thorsty of the Church, he said in after years, ' silenced iny m of T' smine a need bave bluow emy bear guideed termined in favour of Rome. To doubt that the popes Bible remained diametrically opposed to each other, he deness was poured upon the mystery of Golgotha, and he was filled with unutterable joy. 'Certainly,' he said, 'Christ by his obedience and death has fully satisfied the law of God and merited heaven for his elect. That is true righteousness, that is the true salvation.'* He did not advance any farther just then; for some time longer the Roman-Catholic Church was in his eyes the true Church, and the religious orders were holy institutious. He had found that peace which he had sought so long, and was satisfied.

^{*} B. Occhino, 'Responsio qua rationem réddit discessus ex Italia.'

The activity of his life increased, the fervor of his zeal augmented, his preaching became more spiritual and more earnest. He continued his itinerant ministry, and attracted still more the attention of the people of Italy. He always went on foot, though weak in body. His name filled the peninsula, and when he was expected in any city a multitude of people and even nobles and princes would go out to meet him. The principal men of the city would display a deep affection for him, pay him every honor, and not permit him to go and lodge in the wretched cell of a monastery, but force him to accept the brilliant hospitality of their mansions. The magnificence of these dwellings, the costly dresses of their inhabitants, and 'all the pomp of the age,' made no change in his humble and austere life. Sitting at the luxurious banquets of the great ones of this world, he would drink no wine and eat but of one dish, and that the plainest. Being conducted to the best chamber, and invited to repose in a soft and richly-furnished bed, in order to recruit himself after the fatigue of his-journey, he would smile, stretch his threadbare mantle on the floor, and lie down upon it.

As soon as the news of his arrival became known, crowds of people would throng round him from all parts. 'Whole cities went to hear him,' says the Bishop of Amelia, 'and there was no church large enough to contain the multitude of hearers.'† All eyes were fixed on him as soon as he entered the pulpit. His age, his thin pale face, his beard falling be-that comes from man, and perhaps did not seek alone that was still very strong. He was not insensible to the glory for though a new creation had begun in him, the old nature fectation in these strange manners? Probably there was extraordunity man, indeed as a saint. Was there my af was known of his life, made the people regard him as an low the waist, his gray hair and coarse robe, and all that with such ease and grace, that even from the very beginning congregation bung upon his hps Me explained his ideas At length the great orator began to speak, and all the which comes from God.

^{*} B. Occhino, 'Responsio qua rationem reddit discessus ex Italia.'

[†] Ant. M. Gratiani, Bishop of Amelia: see Hist. du Cardinal Commendon, liv. ii. ch. ix.

knowledge and faith though inferior to him in eloquence, were his superiors in He was preceded and aided in that work by men who, alsee him presently producing a religious revival at Naples. voices hailed him as the first preacher of Italy. We shall Bembo, adjudged him the palm of popular eloquence all of the Church, such as Cardinal Sadolet and Cardinal CLOWNS - an enormous sum for those times Even princes eacth butse are obeued one day he collected five thousand At Maples, when he preached for some work of charify, nbich had been handed down through several generations. as they left the church, and renounced the family feuds he pleased * At Perugia, enemies embraced one another eloquence carried anay his hearers, and he led them where had received touched their hearts, the movements of his nscribe new doctrines to him The inn and power which he one, unless he were a very subtle theologian, would dare gelical language, which penetrated the heart, and yet no mality, and talent in his discourses. He made use of eranhe had studied Scripture, there was more elegance, origof his ministry, he charmed all who heard him But after everynhere bearing fruit more or less, klorence, the land At the time when the Word was thus soun, and was

^{† &#}x27;Ut unus optimus totius finius concionator haberetur " -- Brovius, ad Zigi tunuus * Ut suditorum summes quotumque vellet raperet. - Brovnis, ad

of the Medici, so illustrious from its attachment to letters and liberty, was not to be a barren soil. In the year 1500, the year in which Charles V. was born, a rich patrician named Stephen Vermigli had a son whom he named Peter Martyr in honor of Peter of Milan whom the Arians are said to have put to death for maintaining the orthodox faith, and to whom a church was dedicated near the house in which the child was born.* His mother, Maria Fumantina, an educated woman of meek and tranquil piety, devoted herself to her only son, taught him Latin in his earliest years, and poured into his heart that incorruptible spirit, which is of such great value before God. The boy early attended the public schools established for the Florentine youth, and was distinguished for the quickness of his understanding, the extent of his powers, the strength of his memory, and above all by such a thirst for learning that no difficulties could stop him. If Occhino possessed liveliness of feeling and imagination, Peter Martyr possessed solidity of judgment and depth of mind.

Before long the youth was involved in a painful struggle. His father, — either because he disapproved of a monastic life, the abuses of which, even at Florence, had been exposed by Dante and afterwards by Savonarola; or because he was ambitious and desired to see his son attain a brilliant position — intended giving him an education calculated to advance him in the service of the State. Peter Martyr, on the contrary, inspired by the pious feelings which he had inherited from his mother, wished to dedicate himself to God. His greatest ambition was to learn; his glory was to know; knowledge, and especially the knowledge of divine ings, was in his eyes superior to all the world besides. His father commanded in vain and disinherited him in vain; in 1516 the young man entered the monastery of regular canons of St. Augustine at Fiesole, near Florence. After a certain interval of time Peter Martyr felt that he did not

^{*} Ex voto quodam quod fuerant Petro Martyri Mediolanensi, qui quondam ab Arianis occisus est.' — Simler, Vita Petri M. Vermilu,

cutponcism was duite different from that of the princy began to bave a perception that the theology of primitive the Church, Tertullian, Athanasuus, and Augustine, and he read the Greek authors, and then took up the Fathers of the greater part of the mght in the library of his monustery, solved to seek the road by himself. He frequently spent them, for they trught nothing but scholastics, and he rethe theological professors. He was soon disgusted with divine truth, and therefore began to attend the lectures of proofs But he was in search of something better, namely, sugular dissecte skill, of which he afterwards gave striking studied philosophy, and in the public disputations acquired a to the bappiness and real success of a young mru He chastily of thought and that purity of conduct so neces ary temptations were numerous, be was able to preserve that the was in the ago of passions, and bred in cities where found them, in times of trial, his surcet friends . Although ne s to do what was pleasing to bis comrades, that he always father, and displayed such modesty, affection, and eagerteemed by all He venerated the aged as if they were his diligent, affectionate, and respectful, he was loved and ex-Padur, the sert of a celebrated university Quiet, steady, must hirst possess them. He obtained permission to visit that relates to the mamorial coul, but to propagate them, he around him solid haowledge and true hight, especially in all thought that man ought to make it his object to propagate learn much in the clositer He was penetrated with the

In 15.46, his superiors, struck with his trients, called him to the min ity Peter Litery Freedoed at Home, Hollogue, Prica, Vennee, Alamina, Bergamo, and other entes. At the sent time he gave public lessons in literature and philoser, the he gave public lessons in literature and philoser, with no longer contenting himself with the poets, firther, and, no longer contenting himself with the poets, and Faihers of the Church, he desired to know philosephers, and Faihers of the Church, he desired to know philosephers, and Faihers of Home the Holy Scriptures. He was enraptured with them; as the Latin text was not sufficient for him, he read the New Testament in Greek; he next resolved to read the Old Testament also in the original, and meeting with a Jewish doctor named Isaac, at Bologna, he learnt Hebrew of him. Then it was that a new light illumined his fine genins. While he was studying the letter of the Holy Scriptures, the Spirit of God opened his understanding, and displayed before him the mysteries concealed within them.* His learning, labors, and administrative ability had already attracted general consideration; and the pious sentiments he now displayed helped to increase it. He was appointed Abbot of Spoleto, and in 1530 was summoned to a larger theatre, to Naples, as Prior of St. Peter's ad Aram, where we shall meet him erelong.

^{*} Equales suos juantris plerosque rugemo execuleret ita tamen amabat, ita modestia sua sibi dernociebat ut habuent." — Sunier, ita Pata II bernata, Tguri 1969

In 1534 there lived in Sienna a friend of Greek and Latin literature, an enthusiast for Cicero, whose elegant and harmonious periods he translated better than any other scholar, and who was particularly distinguished among the professors of the university for his elevation of soul, love of truth, boldness of thought, and the courage with which he attacked false doctors and sham ascetics. He made a sensation in the world of schools, and, though he had no official post, the students crowded to his lectures. name was Antonio della Paglia, which he latinized, according to the fashion of the age, into Aonius Palearius. This, again, was Italianized into Aonio Paleario. Among the hills which bound the Roman Campagna, near the source of the Garigliano, stands the ancient city of Veroli; here he was born in 1503, of an old patrician house according to some, of the family of an artisan according to others. 1520 he went to Rome, where the love of art and antiquity was then much cultivated, and, from the lessons of illustrious teachers, he learnt to admire Demosthenes, Homer, and visiting Florence, Ferrary, Pidua, and Bologna, he retionate welcome in the families of a few nobles, and offer between the cutzens, * He met, however, with an affice exclaimed Paleario, the city wants nothing but concord their wives and children from the desol tied land 'Alas' men wept over the sorrous of their country, and fled with was wasted in idle and barren di putes. The most eminent the strength of a people who might have donn great things rant, impetuous, turbulent democracy had the upper hand, wrung his heart the State was torn by fretions, an ignoraplured him But erelong he discovered a nound which buildings the cultivated munds of its inhibitants - all en of its fields, the abundance of everything, the beauty of the ters. Its position in the midst of smiling hill," the fertility oity of the Middle Ages, at first delighted the friend of let-That ancient city of the Litu cans, transformed anto a went on to Sienna, where he arrived in the autumn of 1530 purt of 1529, and after spending some time at Perugia, turned his eyes towards Luscany, quitted Rome in the latter the houses were in ruins, the men of letters had fled. Ho reached him When he returned to the prpal city, alasl he was born, but even there the spray of the avalanche are lost!' Paleario hastily took refuge in the valley where the young student exclaumed, 'If they come near us, ne uttered by the imperials is against the city of the pound, reached Rome at the same time with the furious threats in its course. Milan had been crushed, and, when the news down into the ralley, it aresthrew and destroyed everything nyalanche which, shpping from the 1cy mountain tops, rushes 1527 the imperral army descended the Alps, and, the an ut rodal labored and bedruisab trw lo romar A lagriV turned in 1552 to Sienna, to which his friends had mented

^{* &#}x27;Dum litteram aliquandiu sectatur, patefaciente Spiritu Dei, abdita et spiritualia mysteria salutariter cognovit.' — Simler, Vita Petri M. Vermilii, Tiguri, 1569.

[#] Urbe eitu netura et ingene nob lie inter aniernos colles conclusa, fertilis et copiosa. -- Oratio de Concordia Circum p 800 (i' leurs decre li eleiten imsterdant i

opera receive the same on the defent and concord a civilar - Orabo

Paleario was a poet: his fancy was at work wherever he went; and, either during his travels or on his return to the Ghibeline eity, he composed a Latin poem on the immortality of the soul.* We find traces of the Roman doctrine in it, especially of purgatory † and of the queenship of the Virgin.‡ His eyes, however, were already turned towards the Reformation. He desired to have readers like Sadolet, and also the sympathy of Germany.§ The poem evidences a soul which, without having yet found God and the peace he gives, sighs after a new earth, a rejuvenated humanity, and a happiness which consists in contemplating the Almighty, the King of men, as the eternal and absolute goodness and supreme happiness. ||

Ere long Paleario took another step. The religious questions by which Italy was so deeply agitated engrossed that eminent mind. He commenced reading not only Saint Augustine but the Reformers and the Holy Scriptures, and began to speak in his lectures with a liberty that enraptured his hearers, but so exasperated the priests that his friend and patron Sadolet recommended him to be more prudent. Paleario, however, boldly crossed the threshold which separates the literary from the Christian world. He received thoroughly the doetrine of justification by faith, and found in it a peace which was to him a warrant of its truth. Since he in whom the Godhead dwells, he said, has so lovingly poured out his blood for our salvation, we must not doubt of the favor of Heaven. All who turn their souls towards Jesus crueified, and bind themselves to him with

^{*} De Immortalitate Animarum. The pocus was published by Gryphius, at Lyons, in 1536, through the instrumentality of Cardinal Sadvet, Bishop of Carpentras.

^{† &#}x27;Tres igitur sedes statuit pater optimus ipse.'

^{‡ &#}x27;Teque, optima Virgo,

Victricem, præclare acto Regina triumpho.'

^{§ &#}x27; Quales nunc habet ingeniis Germania florens.'

[&]quot; Oculos defigite in unum,

Unus ego omnipotens, ego Rex hominumque Deumque, Æternumque bonum simplexque, et summa voluptas.

⁽Ad finem.)

turned in 1532 to Sieman, to which his friends had merited visiting Florence, Ferrara, Padua, and Bologna, he retionate welcome in the fumilies of a few nobles, and after beincen the catazens. He met, howerer, with an afficexclusined Priering, the city wants nothing but concord their wives and children from the desolated land 'Alast' men wept over the sorrows of their country, and fied with was wasted in idle and barren di putes. The most eminent the strength of a people who might have doun great things rant, impetuous, turbulent democracy had the upper hand, wrung his beart the State was torn by fretions, an ignoraptured him But crelong he discovered a nound ubich buildings, the cultivated minds of its inhabitants - all enof its fields, the abundance of everything, the beauty of the ters. Its position in the midst of smiling hills, the fertility city of the Middle Ages, at first delighted the friend of let-That ancient city of the Etruscans, transformed into ? went on to Sienna, where he arrived in the rutumn of 1550 purt of 1529, and after spending some time at Perugia, turned his eyes ton ands Tuscany, quitted Rome in the latter the house, were in rums, the men of letters had fied He reached hun When he returned to the papal city, alas! he was born, but even there the sprry of the realanche are lost l. Paleano hashly took refuge in the valley where the young student exclaimed, 'If they come near us, we uttered by the imperialists against the city of the pontify, reached frome at the same time with the furious threats n its course. Milan had been crushed, and, when the news down into the railey, it overthrew and destroyed everything avalanche which, shpping from the icy mountain top-, rushes 1527 the unperral army descended the Alps, and, like an VITEL A rumor of war disturbed his peaceful labors. In

* Urbs situ natura et ingenite nob lis, inter animnos colles concluis,

1 / hb I unquam emm cerated definit and concord a civil- - Orabo Opera Welstem /materdam? fertilis et coploes. -- Oral o de Concorden Ciriun p 360 (P bants ספ (מוכטונמים ליונותווד

mu

Paleario was a poet: his fancy was at work wherever he went; and, either during his travels or on his return to the Ghibeline city, he composed a Latin poem on the immortality of the soul.* We find traces of the Roman doctrine in it, especially of purgatory † and of the queenship of the Virgin.‡ His eyes, however, were already turned towards the Reformation. He desired to have readers like Sadolet, and also the sympathy of Germany.§ The poem evidences a soul which, without having yet found God and the peace he gives, sighs after a new earth, a rejuvenated luminity, and a happiness which consists in contemplating the Almighty, the King of men, as the eternal and absolute goodness and supreme happiness. ||

Ere long Paleario took another step. The religious questions by which Italy was so deeply agitated engrossed that eminent mind. He commenced reading not only Saint Augustine but the Reformers and the Holy Scriptures, and began to speak in his lectures with a liberty that enraptured his hearers, but so exasperated the priests that his friend and patron Sadolet recommended him to be more prudent. Paleario, however, boldly crossed the threshold which separates the literary from the Christian world. He received thoroughly the doetrine of justification by faith, and found in it a peace which was to him a warrant of its truth. Since he in whom the Godhead dwells, he said, has so lovingly poured out his blood for our salvation, we must not doubt of the favor of Heaven. All who turn their souls towards Jesus crucified, and bind themselves to him with

Victricem, præclare acto Regina triumpho.'

Unus ego omnipotens, ego Rex hominumque Deumque, Æternumque bonum simplexque, et summa voluptas.

(Ad finem.)

^{*} De Immortalitate Animarum. The poem was published by Gryphius, at Lyons, in 1536, through the instrumentality of Cardinal Sabet, Bishop of Carpentras.

^{† &#}x27;Tres igitur sedes statuit pater optimus ipse.'

^{‡ &#}x27;Teque, optima Virgo,

^{&#}x27; Quales nunc habet ingeniis Germania florens.'

^{|| &#}x27;Oculos defigite in unum,

forgiveness of their sins." thorough confidence, are delivered from evil and receive

Stenna he was alone He married Marretta Guidotti, a Palearra's tender soul needed domestic affections, and at which earl would be forever ban hed be formed out of its inhibitants a kingdom of God, from that, owing to the redemption of Jesus Christ there would existed between the Creator and bis creatures, and rejoiced the free will of God, that an unnard and uninterrupted bond which he fixed his eyes was the creation of the Supreme, secreted to serious meditation. He knew that the world on among the forest oaks, he passed many a perceful day, conbeloved Ceeignana, on the terrace before the house or enjoyed,* the Christian poet bought it, and there, in his where a pure air and the tranquibity of the fields could be plateau, whence flowed a stream, watering the slopes, and situated between Colle and Volterra, at the summit of a which had belanged to Aulus Geema, the friend of Cicera, Palearro loved the country. Having noticed a villa

he sighed after the country, and wrote to one of his friendsuccumb beneath the blows of his adversures, even then will tonard me 't when he fores tw that he must ere long when he exclumed, 'All men are full of Latred and illthousand out of rorror to the an abject to horror to the the ment of come still more butter, when he had lost his hudth, and an elevated soul. At a later period, when his life had beof nature were in Pricario, as they often are, the marks of enemies Family affections and a love for the beauties God, the consolation of a life agreated by the injustice of his Sophomeha, whom he loved tenderly, and who were, after Lampridius and Phadrus, and two drughters, Aspasia and braught up with holy modesty † She bore him twa sons yaung person of re-pectable preatage, who bad been

t. Males olorum et invidorum plena sunt omnis - fed p 209 19 d met mested - 'mesexu al t, y qojesecujajum objimis bateurpas pene et baques equestam quesm * The villa is now the property of Count Guiceiardini

with a simplicity reminding us of ancient times: - 'I am weary of study; fain would I fly to you and pass my days under the warm bright sky of your fields. At early morn, or when the day begins to wane, we will wander through the country, around the cottages, with Lampridius and Phædrus my darling boys, and with your wife and mine.* Get ready the garden, that we may live on herbs, for I am utterly disgusted with the luxurious tables of our cities. The farm shall supply us with eggs and poultry, the river with fish. Oh! how sweet are the repasts at which we eat the fruit we gather from our own garden, the fowls fed by our own hands, the birds caught in our nets, - sweeter far than those where you see nothing on the table but provisions bought in the market! We will work in the fields; we will tire ourselves. Make your preparations; get ready a saw, a hatchet, a wedge to cleave the wood, pruning-shears, a harrow, and a hoe. If these implements fail us, we will be content with planting trees, that shall serve for ages yet to come.' It is pleasing to see the disciple of Cicero and especially of the Bible, at a time when he was tormented by sickness and the hatred of the wicked, rejoicing like a child at the thought of planting trees that should give a cool shade and welcome fruit to coming generations. We shall now describe the end of his stay at Sienna, and what brought his great sorrow upon him, although it will lead us beyond the limits of time we have prescribed for ourselves.

The best friend Paleario possessed was Antonio Bellantes, president of the Council of Nine, a grave and benevolent man, generally loved and respected; in a time of difficulty he had assisted the State by the gift of two million golden crowns. Bellantes estcemed Paleario very highly, and Paleario loved him above all other men. In the course of the popular disturbances, the members of the Council of Nine had been banished; but the senate and people had entreated Bellantes to remain at Stemma—a queople completed the determent of the Bellantes a later Bellantes a lack place one ment at the sons when the Bellantes a later Bellantes a lack threat of the months, that she ment good lady was a great french of the monks, every day the good lady was a great french of the monks, every day the good lady was a great french french of the monks, every day the good lady was a great french french of the seek lady condided from the later of the bellantes are used to rail their some of Bellantes accused the monks of harmy stolen their some of Bellantes accused the monks of harmy stolen their some of Bellantes accused the monks of harmy stolen their some of Bellantes accused the monks of harmy stolen their seek of the monks dented the fact, and were equation they bellanted with a med place of the man and the fact of the med and the later and the later that the later that the later that we have the matter and the later that we have the was the seaton the later that we have the matter and the later that the later that of heresy. His adversance endervoied, therefore, to enhoncret, was not enough, they must have a pulpable mark had occasioned a great scandal among the clerg. That debis, and the keen trony with which he had spoken of hun ang before the shrine of a saint, but who refused to pay his pricet, who was to be seen every morning devoutly kneelcomplaint against him Palcario had ridiculed a wealthy to catch up every word. They soon found fresh subjects of pry into his private life, to watch all his movements, and upon his teaching, Cotta and his other adversance began to to destroy Paleario Not confining themselves to attacks formed for certain exercises of piety, an ore upon the diar Theo hundred members of the Joanelli, a brotherhood from Stenna, in the midet of n oods, grottos, and holy places. formed in the Observantine convent, situated about a mile and made common cause with the monks. A plot was but he afterwards enhated under the banners of the clergy, entite healthog in qu bexim need bad od teth the traines Cotte, a rich, powerful, and ambitious m in of a dominecring At the bead of his rdver aries was the sentior Oito Melio trap him, and some of them, presenting themselves as if they wanted to be instructed, put questions to him ealculated to lead him into the snare. 'What,' they asked, 'is the first means of salvation given by God to man?' He answered 'Christ.' That might pass; but, continuing their questions, Paleario's enemies added: 'What is the second?' In their opinion, he should have indicated meritorious works; but Paleario replied: 'Christ.' Continuing their inquiry, they said: 'And what is the third?' They thought that Paleario should answer, The Church; out of the Church there is no salvation; but he still replied, 'Christ.'* From that moment he was a lost man. The monks and their friends reported to Cotta the answer which they deemed so heretical.

^{*!} Mane aut inclinato in pomeridianum tempus die, cum Lampridio et Phædro, suavissimis pueris, et cum mulieribus nostris eircum villulas errabimus.'— Ibid. p. 209.

[#] Lignipodas, qui in avias conclare quoinite currabant. — Faustus Bellantes to l'afearny, fysik p 91

Paleario had no suspicion of danger. Cardinal Sadolet and some other friends invited him to come and see them at Rome, and he went. He had not been there long before he received a very excited letter from Faustus Bellantes. 'There is a great agitation in the city,' he said; 'an astounding conspiracy has been formed against you by the most eriminal of men.† We do not know upon what the accusation is founded; we are ignorant of the names of your adversaries. The report runs that the chiefs of the state have been excited against you in consequence of calumnious charges concerning religion. It is said that some wretched monks have sworn your ruin; but the plot must have deeper roots. I shall go to Sienna to-morrow, and shall speak to my friends and relations about it. I am ready for everything, even to lose my life in your defence. Meantime I conjure you, let your mind be at peace.'

Bellantes was not deceived. Cotta, without loss of time, appeared in the senate and reported to his colleagues the monstrous language of Paleario, and exclaimed, that if they ^{*} Rogatus quid primum esset generi hominum a Deo datum, in quo salutem collocare mortales possent? Responderim Christum. Quid secundum? Christum. Quid tertium? Christum.'—Palearii Epist. p. 99.

^{† &#}x27;Incredibilem conspirationem scelestissimorum hominum contra te esse factam.' — Palearii Epist. p. 97.

THE REPORTATION IN LUROPE.

alarm caused by a charge of hereay, that no one dared take left in the city. * Every man was silent: such was the suffered him to live, there would be no vestige of religion same time all those who have found reconcilation with God who is achieving the conquest of the world, preserves at the Christ was his king. He knew that that great Sovereign, spiso the cabale of men, and my heart is full of courage.' ‡ eb I . . . †. sqod var si doroda ndorely and best a de-But what matters it? Jesus Christ, whom I have always flercely a man attacks me, the more pious he is rerkened. power of the conspirators is immenes, he said; 'the more the danger that threatened him, he remained frm. 'Tho all their pality contrivances; but although he saw clearly clergy must be against a man who set so little store by dredth part. He could well understand how irritated the of acquiring pardon, that they hardly left Christ the bunseemed to him that the priests had forged so meny means only source whence the now life can be drawn. 11 power of salvation is given to Jesus Christ; He is the prised. One truth was deeply engraved in his heart: All Paleario beard of this, and was distressed but not surup the defence of that courageous Christian.

tear. | Distressed and exhausted, she lost her health; and nas greater than her etrength; she passed u hole days in ture; she was the most unhappy of nomen § Her agony only the misfortunes of the moment; but also those of the fueasiness and trouble; her imagination called up before her not devoted partner, so ardent in her affection, was filled with un-His wife was not so calm. Marietta, his virtuous and mid Aguordi

* Cotta asserebat, me salvo, vestigium religionis in civitate religium every one might see in her face the sorrow which was cont Christus lanten mens mile spem facit, quem sancte et auguste eese nullum " - Ibid. p 99.

sember colur. - Palearu Fpac p 100

| In Incomment to total dies et menter conficient " -- Ibid. f . Miserrima est omnium mulicium ' - Ibid. p. 103. piq! -, una omine contento, fortieres sumo mat ogo bed';

suming her. When her husband heard of this at Rome, he was heart-broken, and conjured his mother and Bellantes to visit Marietta, in order to distract the afflicted wife from her sorrow.

Paleario would have desired to hasten to her in person and confront his accusers; but his friends at Sienua and at Rome alike dissuaded him. The citizens who were then at the head of the state were violent men, of no morality, and as ready to condemn the innocent as to acquit the guilty. was hoped that a new election would bring upright men into power: they conjured Paleario to wait, and he did so. But there was no change: the denunciations, charges, and murmurs only increased. The enemies of the Gospel attacked not merely Paleario, but the reformers, the Germans, as they said: they tried to involve all the friends of the Bible, both German and Italian, in the same condemnation. At last, what had been hoped for came to pass; an important ehange took place in the government of the republic; order and liberty were restored. Paleario thought he could no longer remain away; he left Rome and joined his family at his country-house near Colle.

As soon as his adversaries were informed of his return, they laid a charge of heresy before the senate of Sienna and the court of Rome. Determined to employ all means to destroy Paleario, they resolved to constrain the ecclesiastical authority to go along with them by the strong pressure they would bring to bear upon it. With this intent twelve of them met, and, bent on prevailing upon the archbishop to demand that Paleario should be put upon his trial, they marched through the streets of the city to the prelate's palace. In this excited band there was the senator Cotta with five others, distinguished among whom was Alexis Lucrinas, an impetuous and foolish man; then three priests, people of little importance, but very violent, grossly ignorant, and untiring babblers; * and lastly, three monks. The arch-

^{* &#}x27;Tenues homines sed arrogantes, imperiti, loquacissimi' — Palearii Opera, p. 86.

wretch was silent, the fact was too notorious to be denied, cantion Did I do well or ill? tell me, The poor less usurer I did not, however, give effect to their denun rejoined the prelate, 'who have sworn that you are a merci accounting bendand are sould produce an hundred witnesses, Lucrinas, ' when three hundred citizens are ready to sign the There can be no question of levity, impudently exclaimed that the whole proceeding appeared to him full of levity grave man, had some difficulty to contain himself, and said maledictions in a presionate tone. The bishop, n wise and gan to pour out against Paleario a long string of meults and Looking round him with a sau fied and borsting sur, be be mely had begged that they would allow hun to speaklordship a table, was full of confidence in himself, and accord cutered Lucinnas, who had been sometimes invited to his toot his seat and natted for the strange deputrion he ordered them to be admitted. He rose from his couch, Being informed that they were men of consideration, a servent, and a ked him who were vociferaing in that man who nas taking his stest, being awoke by the noise, cilled and consequently of Paleano. It was afternoon, the prelate of the illustrious house of Precolemini, was a friend of letters the accused to be heard . Archishop Francesco Banding the offence without any form of trial and without permitting t butent should follow manachately upon the statement of but others wanted to proceed more quickly, so that the pun be declared, and then Poleano will be thrown into the fire,' nesses will be heard, the motives of his condemnation will to hunt-hment. Some of the conspirators and 'The witrun to the windows, fancying they were taking some crimin d and disputes, that the women, attracted by the unusual noise, hun, accompuying their march with such shouting, threats, for the subo of the purer air, the delegates went there after bishop happened just then to be at his ville in the suburbs, and too seandalous to be confessed. But his companions were not to be put out by such a trifle; they explained the motives of their prosecution, threw themselves at the prelate's feet, and conjured him in the name of religion to support the charge against Paleario. The archbishop, considering that it was a question of heresy, thought that it was a matter for the courts to decide, and consented to their prayer.

^{#. 71 :} aud t s testidde moz na igne n contre putedant. indicata couss at 1. 2 : aud t s testidde moz na igne n confic eadum censedant.

Paleario's enemies set to work immediately; they endeavored to prejudice the most notable persons in Sienna against him; and pieked out individuals from among the populaee, who were without light and without eonscience, whom they induced to testify before the court to things of which they knew nothing.* It was in vain that the famous Sadolet, summoned to Rome by the pope, stopped at Sienna, and undertook Paleario's defence. It was in vain that the eardinal, the archbishop, and Paleario had a consultation in which Sadolet commended the accused to the archbishop, and gave touching proofs of his esteem and affection for him; the conspirators were able to turn the interview against the man whom they had sworn to sacrifice to their hatred. number of people who had assembled in the public square began to talk about the conference: 'When Paleario was accused by the prelate,' said some, 'he was silent through shame.' 'No,' said the others, 'he answered, but was sharply reprimanded by Sadolet.'† Impatient to see their victim handed over to death, happy at having already eaused doubt in the mind of the archbishop, and imagining they had convinced Sfondrati the president of the republic, and Crasso the prætor, the twelve obtained an order for Paleario to be summoned before the senate on a charge of heresy.

That innocent and just man was not blind to the danger and difficulty of his position. He felt that the calumnies of man turn? n hom can he mplore?' assembled on every side † Alisl where can the righteous so holy, even the all meocent Jesus Christ bimself, was enemies But even He than whom none was so good, none Then a start in a fact them open to the attrebs of their not speak of Socrates, Scipno, Rutilius, or Metellus, certain gree n ay under the attacks of such a perter e zeal? I will months Has there ever been a man saintly enough not to haired upon haired * they have done nothing el e these six Guom noon Suom deen, pas end, poen noon atous anop nus for some time without comfort, and his soul was bow-d Christian, that it is a privilege of the child of God, but he knew full well that allictions awaken hearenly life in the covered his fice. Oh! how bitter was such a trial! He be a widow and his children orphins a veil of sadness nus beginning to enjoy - Ero long perhaps, his nife nould becale up old fraced hips, and destroy the perce that the city his cucinies would check the good he hoped to do, would recognized him, he was agitated and indignant at seeing come at last when he could fall upon his prey Paleario sumptions assurance, and feeling certain that the time had adversames were there also, Cotta especially, full of preate, and the Mine were seated in their judicial chairs hands Sfondratt the president, Glasso the prætor, the sen He stood in the presence of those who held his life in their who were unwilling to foreshe him in the day of his distress tes, son of his old friend accompanied by some futbful men the hall leaning on the arm of the youthful Frustus Belian He went to the palace of the Signiory, and entered servants, and that with Him they are free from every dan full which inspired his heart told him that God loves his evived He was not only strong in his innocence, but the himself summoned to appear before the sen ite, his courage Paleatue soon terrut te ausmer thus When he found him quietly taking his seat in the senate, at the very time he was bent on carrying out an infamous plot. He contained himself, however; and, first addressing the senators, to whom he gave the title employed in ancient Rome, he said: * 'Conscript fathers, when there was a talk about me in former years, I was not seriously moved by it: the times were times of desolution; all human and divine rights were eonfounded in the same disorder. But now, when, by the goodness of God, men of wisdom have been placed at the head of the republic, when the sap and the blood circulate afresh through the state,† why should I not lift up my head?'

^{* &#}x27;Testes partim e plebecula tenues, rerum de quibus testimonium dixerunt imperiti.' — Palearii Epist. p. 116.

^{† &#}x27;Alii respondentem graviter objurgatum a Sadoleto.' — Palearii Epist. p. 118.

Cousins — Folgari Eprit p 116

Foundation contemporalist est indicent as must have been made and -10 d d. p. 119

By degrees Paleario grew warm; his eyes fell again upon his insolent enemy whom he apostrophized as Cicero did Catiline: 'Cotta, you wicked, arrogant, and factions man,' he said, 'who practise not that religion in which God is worshipped in spirit and in truth, but that which plunges into every superstition, because it is the best adapted to impose upon mankind: Cotta, you imagine you are a Christian, because you bear the image of Christ upon your purple robe; while by your calumnies you are crushing an innocent man, who is also an image, a living image, of Jesus Christ. When you accused me falsely of a crime, did you obey Jesus Christ? When you went to the house of the Nine to utter falsehoods against me, did you think, Cotta, you were making a pilgrimage to Jerusalem? I am surprised that you do not crucify innocent persons. . . You would do it yes, you would do it, if you could do all that your pride suggests.' İ

Paleario then passed on to a more important subject. In ^{*} Oratio tertia pro se ipso. This is the speech which the ecclesiastical authorities of Naples cut out of all the copies of Paleario's works that fell into their hands, but which we have found complete in the edition of Amsterdam, pp. 73-97.

^{† &#}x27;Cnm succus et sanguis Reipublicæ sit restitutus.' — Palearii Opera, edit. Amsterdam, p. 73.

^{† &#}x27;Homines innocentes in crucem tollas. . . . Tolleres, tolleres quidem si quantum furor iste, superbia, iracundia affert, tantum tibi liceret.' -- Ibid. p. 80.

, Xon pring impudent reproaches neunet me, Cotta, he fended the reformers in the presence of all Italy. Paleario demaking use of to transform Christin secucity the Reformation, and those excellent men ulion God uas attaching him, his adversames really attacked the Gospel, DOOR AIL doctor's seat or the bishop's throne, let them put mitres or conscience is at liberty . Let those vile flatterers sit on the to hve honestly . My circumstances may be narrow, but my m Germany. . . Ahl concerpt fulters, rather three strice after those delights which lead many astroy, I prefix tan good preferments, fight against even that which is good You would like me to unitate the folly of those who, to obmen of the first centuries, may not I follow them alove German schools have followed the footsteps of these hely the Germans? What ! because the learned professors of the Christian antiquity, why repeat perpetu illy that I think like rome If I purpose mutating those tha trious doctors of Chrysostom, Cyrillus, Irenzus, Hilary, Augustin, and Jeearly fathers To accuse the Germans is to accuse Origen, have professed the truths which we find set forth by the of those doctors? . Exact, sincere, earnest, they that there are many things wortby of praise in the works there a single theologian in Italy so stupid as not to know thon, Luther, Pomeranus, Bucer, and their friends But is mans that you mean are Occhampadiu, Erramus, Melancthem I know the renom they contain . . . The Geraro unmeaning in appearance, there is a sung lying under grant there are in Gernanyl But though your accusations that you mean only the theologians? What noble theoloknow that the nuguet emperor is a Germant Will you ear ton now of child stands and the October but of you not try accuration 1 Do you pretend to bind all the Germans in hey ring adopted the opinions of the Germans What a palmattery, that I am falling into beresy, and you accuse me of continued, 'you assert that I think wrongly on refigious gusta, læta, alacıra." - Palearu Opera, edit Amsterdam, p 84 us sudifariened tuttus ne situeicence is ites sternitas unob sent, *

tiaras on their heads, let them wear the purple.* . . . Not so for me, I will remain in my library, sitting on a wooden stool, wearing a woollen garment against the cold, a linen garment in the heat, and with only a little bed on which to taste the repose of sleep.

But, Cotta, you still continue your attacks; you reproach me for praising all the Germans say and do. No! there are some things I approve of in them and others that I do not. When I meet with thoughts which for ages have been obscured by a barbarous style, hidden under the brambles of scholasticism, and sunk into the deepest darkness - when I see these brought into the full light of day, placed within the reach of all, and expressed in the choicest Latinity, I not only praise the Germans, but I heartily thank them. Sacred studies had fallen asleep in convent cells, where the idle men who should have cultivated them had hidden themselves as if in gloomy forests, under the pretence of applying to work. But what happened? They snored so lond that we could hear them in our cities and towns.† Now, learning has been restored to us; Latin, Greek, and Chaldee libraries have been formed; assistance has been honorably extended to the theologians; precious books have been multiplied by means of the wonderful invention of printing. Can there be anything more striking, more glorious, or more deserving our eternal gratitude?'

After this defence of the literary and reforming movement of Germany, Paleario came to what is grander than all—to Christ: 'Are they not insufferable men,' he said, 'nay, wieked men, before whom we dare not praise the God of our salvation, Jesus Christ, the King of all nations, by whose death such precious boons have been conferred upon to be con umed by fire, - all these are irilles, if only by such hanged, to be seven up in a sack, to be thrown to wild beasts, cused and east into prison is a trifle, to be scourged, to be ought to die in his bed. All conscript futhers, to be ac me, in truth I do not think that a Christian in our times the Son of God, believe me that no happier fate could befall must suffer that penalty for the testimony I have borne to I'll forth out of the my order of blessed and a store of the local of the latter of th men or twelve wild bersts, who desire that the man who estable to those twelve . . shall lary to those twelve perfect confidence. These are the things that appeared denlio, being converted to Christ cruesfied, trust in bim with arrised, that all condemnation was done anay with for the e ful documents, I had declared that the end of all evils had nic Ou the nuthority of the most aneuent and most faith the I am reprorched in the accusation brought against the human race? And jet for this, conscript fathers, yes, punishments truth a brought mio tho light of day".

^{* &#}x27;Sedeant illi in cathedra, diademata imponunt, dibaphum vestiant.'

[†] Jacebant divina studia, strata in cellulis hominum otiosorum, qui lieet in sylvas se abstrusissent, ut in hæc incumberent; ita stertebant tamen, ut nos in urbibus et vicis audiremus.' — Palearii Opera, edit. Amsterdam, pp. 81–85.

Aomo Palerro did not speak as a ristorneum, he was no maker of Occoronian periods.

The near who can this time professor and did so again in his Beneficio di Gesti Christo erosifisso, I grato bis his for it. If he spoke as Sienny, he was to act at Nome. In early of these phases we recognize the noble victual of 1570 grato has hide of it. If he spoke at Sienny, he was to act at Monne. In each of these phases we recognize the noble vical man of 1570.

After speaking the a martyr, he spoke like a man He looked round him some of the most eminent entrens, the looked round him some of the most eminent entrens, the Loucredis, the Placidis, the Malevolias were near him bill Enucredis, the Placidis, the Malevolias were near him bill monks — nien rhounding in piety and modesty — strongth **

* Parun est accusant et deduca in carcerem væs esed reste sur

* Parun est accusant et deduca in carcerem væs esed reste sur

pend mesu in calcum fern oby et ad. genen toren no coefe is it

pend mesu in calcum fern oby et ad. genen toren no coefe is it

pend mesu in calcum fern oby et ad. genen toren no coefe is it is

pend mesu in calcum fern oby et ad. genen toren no coefe is it is

pend mesu in calcum fern oby et ad. genen toren no coefe is it is pend mesu in calcum fern oby et al. genen toren oby et al. genen toren oby et al. genen toren oby et al. genen fern oby et al. genen toren object is a general toren object is a general toren object is a general torent object is a general torent object is a general toren object is a general torent object is a general tore of emotion Egidio, superior of the Augustines, and his

11 18 3950 on revision and a ground man to retain any enter the control manes of the control manes from the control manes of the control manes from the control manes fr

young friends, Faustus and Evander Bellantes, keeping their eyes fixed upon him, could not restrain their tears. Presently a more moving sight met his eyes: he beheld Marietta, pale and weeping. 'What do I see?' he exclaimed. 'Thou also, my wife, art thou come dressed in mourning weeds, accompanied by the noblest and most pious of women—art thou come with thy children, to throw thyself at the feet of the senators? O my light, my life, my soul! return home, train up our children; do not be afraid, Christ who is thy spouse will be their father.* . . Alas! she is half killed with grief.† O mother, support her, take her away; take her to your own home, if you can . . . and let your love dry up her tears.'

The impression produced by this address was so profound, that the senate declared Paleario innocent. But such a striking triumph served only to enrage his enemies the more: he saw that he could not remain at Sienna, and therefore took leave of his friends. Bellantes, on his deathbed, had commended his children to him, and Paleario exhorted them to aspire to something great. It is probable that he went to Rome for a short time, where his friends had got the proceedings set aside which his enemies had commenced against him; and afterwards to Lucca, where the chair of eloquence was given him. He left a great void at Sienna, and his friends were grieved. Faustus Bellantes seemed to express the feelings of all when he wrote: 'Since you left, such a torpor has come over me that I am scarcely able to write.' !

Besides these lights—a Curione or a Paleario, scattered here and there over Italy—there were societies of Christian men in several cities who courageously professed evangelical truth. Bologna in particular—a city in the neighborhood of Ferrara, and whose university was, along with that of Paris, the first of the great schools of Europe—counted a ^{* &#}x27;Nunquam iis sponsore Christo deerit pater.' — Palearii Opera, p. 97.

^{† &#}x27;Præ dolore misere exauimatam.' - Ibid.

^{‡ &#}x27;Postquam in urbem profectus es, ita nescio quomodo animus meus

torpurt, ut d meellemum in hi fuer t serbere epistolum hane. - Palearu meurring the reproach of heresy, and even to quote the monks, and laty be at liberty to possess the Bible without reformers) have explained their faith. At least let priests, liberty to read the books in which learned doctors (if o and from Jesus Christ life eternal Let every one be at cellent work he will receive appropriate honor from men, through the neglect of his predecessors, and for that ex easily remedy the abuses that have crept into the Church manding it. If the pope should summon a council, be will and a select the stee waters for it and loudly de the emperor knows, a great number of pious wise, and dis In all the tonne of the penneula and in Rome itself, as to employ every means for the convocation of a council redemption has drawn nigh to her at last. We entread you and special gratitude, because, through the goodness of God, nearest to bim, as it is his seat," experiences the livehest Joy own Of all countries subject to the tyrant, Italy, being the lord, but there is no nation more indebted to you than our debt of gratifude both to them and to you, most honored For this reason all the nations of Christendom owe a deep mierce, but with a riew to the extrainm of other people. know that if they demand a council, it is not in their own unprisonment, fire and sword for the cause of Christ. We reloice because they are thought worthy of enduring shame, hereties has been given them, and that, on the contrary, they to same all other troubled because the bateful anne of utained to the liberty of the children of God We know Germana have thrown off the yoke of antichtist and have thorough Italian ardor 'We know, they said, 'that the evangelical Christians of Bologua addressed him with from Sexony to the emperor, ere sed the Alps in 1533, the ples of the Reformation When John of Planits, imbassatior Venuce, showed much zenl and decision for the great princilarge number of laymen and ecclesizates who, like those of words of Christ and of St. Paul without being reviled as sectarians. If, on the contrary, Rome tramples under foot the commandments of the Lord, his grace, his doctrine, his peace, and the liberty which he gives—has not the reign of Antichrist begun? . . . If you need our help, speak! we are ready. If necessary, we will sacrifice our fortunes and our lives in the Redeemer's cause; and as long as we live we will commend it daily to God by fervent prayer.'* Such was the decision of the Christians of Italy, even in the cities subject to the pope.

worfen js deseen S tz sey - Seckendord's twn istio p 1366

About the time when this eloquent address reached the lord of Planitz, John Mollio, a Franciscan from the neighborhood of Sienna, arrived at Bologna as professor in the university. Convinced by the teaching of the Holy Scriptures and of the reformers, he professed with great freedom the Christian truth according to the writings of St. Paul; but the pope forbade him to lecture on the epistles of that Apostle. Mollio then took up the other books of the New Testament; but he drew from them the same doctrine, and his hearers, delighted at seeing the pope's prohibition thus evaded, enthusiastically applauded him. The Court of Rome, finding that there was no means of turning grace out of the Bible, gave orders to turn Mollio out of the university—which was much easier. However, the number of evangelical Christians in Bologna continued to increase.†

^{*} The Italian original, which is dated 5th January, 1533, is preserved in the archives of Weimar. Seckendorff gives a German translation in his ! History of Lutheranism,' pp. 1365-1367.

[†] Mac Crie, History of the Reformation in Italy, p 88.

THE GOSPEL AT MAPLES AND ROME. CHAPTER XX.

(1220-1230)

Italy. Among the contemporaries and acquamtances of It was not the Italians alone who spread the Gospel in eren at Rome. centre of the pennsula; it did the same at Napley and THE Gospel and made noble conquests in the north and peror at Worms, when Lather made his famous appearance Spaniard was among the gentlemen who attended the emcrown at Arx-la-Chapelle. In the following year the young him when he left Sprin in 1520, to receive the imperial Charles V. made Alfonso his secretary,† and took him with New Castile, of which their father was corregidor in 1520 Juan. The two Valdez were born in 1500, at Cuença, in Alfonso: his actions are recorded, but they are ascribed to into one person. One of them drappears, and it is nearly tended for a pleasant lest, have converted the two brothers toriang understanding literally what Erasmus merely inas one, and not two individuals. And, indeed, some hisfor twins, but for the same person. I shall regard you, then, and in talent, that when people see you, they do not take you They tell me you are so like your brother, both in figure able, that Erasmus, who knew Alfonso, wrote to Juan; Spine, Juan and Alfonso de Valdez. They were so much ers, descended from one of the oldest families of Leon in Paleario, Peter Martyr, and Occhino, were two twin broth-

Cuenza, quoted by E Borhmer t Vue secretario de la Magrestad del Emperador ' - Niat de la Cuedad de

attis ' - Erasmi chied 938 et 1030 mgenn deztentate, ut non duo gemelli, sed idem proreus homo tiders pos-* ' Lu vero, nt audio, sie illum (Alfonsum) refers et corpora specie et

before the Diet. Luther's writings having been condemned by imperial decree to be burnt, Alfonso, whom all these events interested in the highest degree, desired to be present at the execution of the sentence. When the monks, who surrounded and fed the fire saw all the heretical paper converted into black ashes, as thin as a spider's web, and blown to and fro by the wind, they exclaimed: 'There is nothing more to fear now: it is all over;' and then went away. such was not Alfonso's opinion. 'They call it the end of the tragedy,' he wrote to his friend Peter Martyr of Anghiera (who must not be confounded with Vermigh), but I believe we are only at the beginning of it.' Valdez, whom everybody looked upon as a youth of great expectation,* became intimate with Erasmus; perhaps at the suggestion of the emperor, who, like Francis L, would willingly have united with the prince of the schools, in order to become master of Luther and the pope, and if possible to reconcile them. Alfonso, who was a great admirer of Erasmus, was considered to be more Erasmian than Erasmus himself; but the disciple went further and higher than the teacher. Erasmus was the bridge by which Alfonso crossed the river, and passed from Rome to the Gospel.

In May, 1527, the emperor and his court were at Valladolid, where the empress awaited her confinement. Valdez was there also. On a sudden the news arrived of the famous sack of Rome by the troops of Charles V. The indignation of the clergy, the agitation of the people, and the emotion of the courtiers were extreme. Although grieved by the excess of which the capital of Romanism had been the theatre, Alfonso believed it was the season to say what he thought of the papacy, and consequently he wrote and published a 'Dialogue on the Things which happened at Rome.'† The afflictions of the metropolis of eatholicism, he says, have dispersed a great number of its ever, I do not speak of those which require believers to marks the knight 'Let us understand one another, howabout, 'The relics of the saints should be honored, re tendom Even the bones of the Aposiles were scattered not a single mass has been said in the metropolis of Chris of St Peter has been turned into a stable tor forty days come Rome agrun, even in half a century The boly church a loss of afteen millions of ducats Rome will never be and univeté 'Alas I the saching of the city has occasioned of Rome than about its faults, exclaims with mingled sorrow the archdeacon, much more sensitive about the punishment calamities of war to fall opon your impenitent city' Here tore, had recourse to other appeals, and permuted the of Luther could convince Rome of its errors God, thererespectful advice of Erasmus nor the prieverent language their obedience to you. It was all of no use, neither the vices in broad daylight, and to detach many churches from perenticed Martin Luther unsparingly to expose all your his gentle remonstrances did not touch you I ben God Erasmus pointed out the faults of the Court of Rome, but as not a state worse governed than the States of the Church great burden of secular things. In all Christendom there much more freely with spiritual interests if they shad not this bourd boucks the believe they could occupy themselves he ishe, for the ligh priests of Christendom to possess temfrom the temporal power 'Is it useful as at advantageous,' even further, and deel ax a for the separation of the spiritual nece daice nen in the 'most catholic' kingdom. He goes tiff, which Luther's pen could describe so well, but which contrasts of light and darkness, between Christ and the pon honored his holy calling. Lactonito drans one of those ab and edito and of luiditalinu bna an odt to rotegien an these di reters, says the hught, hes with the pope, who, the emperor's knights, by name Lactontic. The guilt of (the future Philip II) bad just been born, he meets one of icr, arrives at Valladohd, and in the town where a prince mhabitants, n Roman archbishop, escaping from the drassolve some very thorny problems — to decide, for instance, whether the mother of the Virgin had two heads or the Virgin had two mothers. . . . We should place all our hope in Jesus Christ alone. Honor images, if you like, but do not dishonor Jesus Christ, and do not let Paradise be shut against the man who has no money in his purse.' *

^{* &#}x27;Ab Alfonso Valdesio, magnæ spei juvene.' - Petri Martyris Anghierii Epist. p. 689.

[†] Dialogo sulle Coso accadute in Roma.

This sharp attack, levelled at the papacy, was the more important, as before the dialogue was published and circulated in Spain, Italy, and Germany, it had been submitted by Valdez to several men of mark: to Don Juan Manuel, formerly ambassador of the emperor at Rome, to the celebrated imperial chancellor Gattinara, to Doctor Carrasco, and several other theologians, who with a few unimportant observations, had approved it. Count Castiglione, the papal nuncio, was not to be deceived; he made a violent attack upon the imperial secretary, called him a Lutheran, and declared that he could already see him wearing the ignominious costume of the autos da fé.

Alfonso was silent; but a voice was raised in his defence—it was that of his twin brother. In 1528† Juan published a Dialogue, half serious and half in jest, between Mercury and Charon, which bears the mark of a young writer. While the ferryman of Hades is busy taking over the souls which come to him on the banks of the Styx, he is accosted by the messenger of heaven, who makes use of strong language about the papacy. 'So great is the corruption of those who call themselves Christians,' he says, 'that I should consider it a great insult if they wanted to change their name and be called Mercurians. One day,' he con-

^{*} Mr. Bæhmer, of the university of Halle, has done good service to literature and to the history of religion by reprinting at Halle, in 1860, the Cento e dieci divine Considerazioni di Giovanni Valdesso, and by carefully studying the history of the two brothers. He has communicated the result of his researches in his Cenni Biografici, and in the conscientious paper he has contributed to the Encyclopædia of our learned friend M. Herzog.

[†] It has been stated that this dialogue was written in 1521; but it begins with the history of the challenge sent by Francis I. to Charles V., which occurred at the beginning of 1528.

ch y History of the Reformation of the Sixteenth Century vol. 1v bk x1v

caped safe and sound from the tempest.*

When the emperor returned to Germany, Altonso accompanied h m. At Aug-durg, m. 1380, as we brive said in an entire played the part of mediator between an elegant which have been recently reprinted a spanier were tree disputes which have been recently reprinted a spanier were true historial talents.

Erasmus wrote to Juan, congratulating him on having es were protected by the name of Charles V In March, 1929, the priests raised a violent storm against them, but they ment, however, persecution did nor touch them It is true, of Christian truth, excited load recrammations, for the mo The dialogues of the twin brothers, so full of nit and yet the cobbler is always ill shod, and the barber never shaved place where the best wine grous you drink the worst, that word, 'It is quite the rule, answers Mercury, that at the the pretended vicars of heaven often forget to keep their the ill-doers ill-dood! And when Charon complains that sellers have been sold, the rebbers baye been robbed, and much, Beliefe the judgment of God! he eays, the of the sack of Rome, Mercury hursts out mie an 'Olympi'm But the saure unmediately begins again. At the thought good of Christians, we have enshined in our witings." continues, must new be paid to the spirit which, for the their bodies . The homage bulberto paid to our bone, he the epistics of St Paul or of hunself than upon all the relies of Christians that they ought to set more value upon one of nig to the fervent aposite, the plunder of Rome teaches his mouth on this subject than those of Mercury Accord Rome, Juan introduces St Peter, and puts wiser words into to dore and ered to be the greatest outrage in the such of pay for it Then, turning to the relics, whose dispersion But I was refused, and why? Solely because I would not gartalring one of the wafers the priests were distributing receive the host, I followed them, with the pious design of of while all gardenorger of people of grade the alter the

Charles V. and the protestants, and immediately translated the celebrated evangelical confession into Spanish. But in April, 1533, when Charles V. embarked at Genoa on his return to Spain, Valdez remained in Italy. If he had accompanied his master, even that powerful monarch, it was said, could not have preserved him from the death the monks were preparing for him. From this period Alfonso seems to have shared his time between Germany and Italy: henceforward his brother occupies the foremost place. He was converted to the Gospel after Alfonso, but eventually outstripped him.

Juan had been forced to leave his native country.* did not go to Germany, as some have said, confounding him with his brother; but henceforward he occupies an important position in Italy. In 1531 he went to Naples, thence he proceeded to Rome, returning again to Naples in 1534, where he spent the remainder of his days. Some zealous protestants, who formed part of the German army, and had been sent, in 1528, to drive off the French, who were besieging that city, were the first to propagate the knowledge of the Gospel in that district. But when Juan Valdez arrived,' says the Roman-catholic Caracciolo, 'he alone committed greater ravages among souls than many thousands of heretic soldiers had done.'† Some have thought that he occupied the post of secretary to the viceroy of Naples. But if he had an office at court, he soon resigned it to enjoy his independence. 'He did not frequent the court very much,' says Curione, 'after Christ was revealed to him.' ‡

Persecution had made Juan more serious; the experiences of his inner life had matured him; he was still busy

^{* &#}x27;In disciplina fraterna præclare institutus, in Hispania vivere non potuit.' — Francisco Enzinas to Melancthon.

^{† &#}x27;Longe majorem mentium stragem dedit, quam multa illa hæreticorum militum millia.' — Ant. Caracciolo, de Vita Pauli IV. p. 239.

^{‡ &#}x27;Non però ha egli seguito molto la corte dopo che gli fu rivelato Christo.' — Epist. de Curione at the end of the Cento e dieci divine Considerazioni of J. Valdez, p. 433.

0981 ut # His Dunlogo de la Lengua was first printed at blads d in 1"St and aga n a still more honored and brilliant knight of Jesus Christ' I and brilliant baight of the emperor, says Curione, 'he "as introduced them to the unignificence of grace ' in honored content to admire with them the magnificence of nature, he passed hours and days never to be forgotten. He was not by the loveliness of his doctrine and the holiness of his life, who behold her, Jurn Valdez, and such as were attracted where Kature exults in her magnificence and smiles on all front of the island of Misida In that delightful counity tomb, in a villa whose gardens looked over the wide sea, in friends together at Chiays, near Pausilippo and Virgil's the contemplation of truth, He generally collected his the greater part of that elear, bright spirit was devoted to soul served to animate his delicate and puny nature, while settle at Naples 'But,' said his friend, 'one part of his would appear that the state of his health induced him to not robust, he was thun, and his limbs nere weak, and it all things to all men to bring souls to Christ † Valdez was of the rudest men, the luzarons of that day He became he put the poor at their ease, and non the confidence even love in his heart and so much simplicity in his manner, that their own months. But at the same time he had so much Italy 'I know it, eays Curione, 'for I have heard it from torch to enlighten some of the most celebrated preachers of to the salvation that is in Christ Jesus He was even a the nothingness of their own righteonsness, and to lead them extricate them from their worldliness, to consince them of circle of scholars and gentlemen about him, he strove to chiten over all who came near him He soon gathered i attraction in his character, that he exerci ed an irresistible in his mind, such peace and innocence in his features, such ver ation as nell is by his writings. There was such grice above everything, and sought to make it known by his conwith hierature and languages, but he loved the Gospel

t Ma o a onorato e splendido casabiere di Cristo -- Cur one Epist p 453

t . Era di tanta benguntà e car i's, cle a ogni p cola e bassi e rozze persona si rendeva deb tore - Cur o te Iput p 433

Among the eminently gifted men who gathered round him was Peter Martyr Vermigli, abbot of St. Peter's ad aram. Peter Martyr, as we have said, had gone from Spoleto to Naples in 1530, where he had made great progress in the knowledge of the Gospel. Nothing could divert him from the search after truth; neither fear of the world, nor the great income he possessed, nor the high dignity with which he was invested. That earnest soul, that profound mind, pursued after the knowledge of God with indefatigable zeal. Being ealled to give drink to the sheep which, attracted by his voice, crowded to the sheepfold, he was thirsty himself, and alas! he had no water. He experienced that tormenting, that bitter, that violent thirst under which the strongest men sometimes give way. It was then he heard those words of Christ: If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink. He knew that man comes to Christ by faith, - by believing in his holiness, in his love, in his promises, and in his almighty power to save. Putting scholasticism aside, and no longer contenting himself with the Fathers of the Church, he hastened to the fountain of Scripture and drank of the eup of salvation.* He knew the fulness of grace which is in the Redeemer, and understood how those who seek eonsolation elsewhere labor in vain. Growing more enlightened every day by the Spirit of God, he discovered the grievous errors of the Church and the simple grandeur of the Gospel. It was at Naples that the light of the divine Word shone into his soul with increasing glory and splendor.† Vermigli admired the beauties of creation, the sea glittering in the sunshine, and the graceful promontories of the bay; but he loved still better to plunge into the mysterious splendors of grace. He did not confine himself to the writings of the Apostles, but added those of the reformers, - of Bucer, Zwingle, Luther, and Melancthon. Zwingle's treatise on t 'Loci amœnitatem.' - Ibid.

^{* &#}x27;Ad ipsos fontes se totum contulit.' - Simler, Vita Vermilii.

^{† &#}x27;In hac urbe gratia divinæ illuminationis illustrius ac clarius illi effulgere.' — Ibid.

False and Twue Religion showed him the necessity of returning to the simplicity and primitive customs of the Church Almost crery day he conversed upon Holy Scrip undefiled, and principally with Flymano and Valdez " But above all though he sought to impart by preaching the nated file.

Bally pass for true, said Peter Martyr 'There is nothing trines taught in the Church 'False terchings cannot eler gold these it cannot destroy So it will be with the doc attacks in rain the marble and the preper, the cilver and built the flame consumes the nood and stubble, but it munifest the divers materrals with which the house was happen? When a confagration breaks out, the fire makes which sin has overshadoned his understanding, what will from man s own righteousness and from the darkness with doctrines are substituted for them, - doctrines proceeding self, from his divinity, truth, grace, and spirit. If fall e we must build sound doctrines which flow from Christ him with the edifice of God. On the foundation, which is Chri i, Other coarse materials employed in the structure. It is so rations, but there will also be nood and paper, stubble and the statues, gold and silver will serve for the internal deco shall form the pillars, the mantel piece, the pavement, and terrals to complete the work Marble, porphyry, and Jasper of the edifice he intends to raise, he employs rarious mron that stone? When the architect has laid the foundations tokick is Jesus Christ, says the Apostle But what is built built. For other foundation can no man lay thun that is laid, tion upon which the whole of Christian doctrine must be to the third chapter, I be first showed what was the founda a large audience, including even bishops When he came Epistic to the Cornthans, which to did in the presence of To the end Vernigh undertook to preach on the First hidden which shall not be revealed; if the falsehood of the dogmas put forth is not detected at the first, time will make it known.* The day will come when every error hidden under an appearance of truth shall be declared to be error in the most striking manner; all darkness shall be scattered, everything will be valued in conformity with its strict reality.† The eternal judgment of God is the fire that shall try every man's work. It is not enough that the doctrines should be approved by the judgment of men, they must be able to stand before the fire of God's trial.‡ The day and the fire of which the Apostle speaks are the piercing investigation, the sure touchstone, which will enable us at last to distinguish between true doctrines and false.§ Gold, stubble, fire—they are all metaphors.'

^{*} Quotid e prene com em cis qui pures rel grous stud osi crant sliquid * Quotid e prene commentabatur — Sumler, Vita Vernatiu.

Peter Martyr's audience, and especially the ecclesiastics, were unable to conceal their surprise. The passage which he thus explained was that on which the Romish Church based the doctrine of purgatorial fire; but the learned doctor found something quite different in it. The priests and monks not only saw that precious fire taken away from which they had derived so much profit, but saw another fire substituted for it, which threatened to consume their traditions and practices, their hay and stubble. And hence the sermon aroused a storm in the hitherto calm waters of Naples. The monks accused the prior of St. Peter's ad aram, and his friends of Chiaja defended him. His enemies succeeded in closing the pulpit against him; but on the intervention of the powerful protectors he possessed at Rome, his liberty of preaching was restored.

^{* &#}x27;Quod si e vestigio prava dogmata non patefiant, accessione temporis declarantur.' — Petri Martyris Loci Communes; de Purgatorio Igne, p. 440.

^{† &#}x27;Dies ergo accipitur, cum tenebræ depellentur, ut dc re, prout ipsa est, judicium feratur.' — Ibid. p 441.

^{‡ &#}x27;Ad ignem divini examinis perstare illas oportet.' - Ibid.

^{§ &#}x27;Est itaque ignis et dies, clara inspectio, certa probatio, perspicua revelatio, qua tandem cognoscemus doctrinarum veritatem, earum denique fallaciam.' — Petri Martyris Loci Communes: de Purgatorio Igne. These may not be the exact words used by Peter Martyr in his sermon, but the sense was the same.

tent to have God alone for a witness, the reformer, when Carrectolt 'did not court the applause of men, and was con to show his respect for the firmness of his faith Although comed him like a son, dedicated one of his writings to him, faithful to it, he took refuge in Geneva Calvin, who nel with joy the salvation of the Gospel, and, desiring to remain among thorns, but a hille later the young marque received to Valdez For some time longer the seed continued to fall Chi ija might perhaps win over his fizend, he introduced him then thinking that a society so cultivated as that which met at rire or ball Caseria took him to hear Peter Martyr, and youthful chamberlain of Charles V would burry off to the which is Christ Jesus, but after these conversations, the ling about the Word of God and the caly way of salvation tian taking advantage of this intimacy, spoke to the world ship, however, bound him to the pious Caseria. The Chrisof the earth, and to projects of ambition A close friend self up entirely to the vanities of the norld, to the pleasures returned from time to time to Miples, where he give him bis household. As Galeazzo was not aluays on service, he emperor, who are ested him with one of the great offices of tion in another direction, and sent his son to the court of the his desire for posterity would be satt fied, he turned his ambitriff was supram blo oilt er noos eA stotilguab out ban daughter of the Duke of Norers, who hore hun four sons name, he married him early to a wealthy henress, Vittoria, only son, Galcazzo. Ardently destring to perpeturite his Marquis Carrectoh, one of the grandees of Maples, had an of T birow adt de exchandes adt de tebem adt at garvil Caserta * The latter had a young relative, at that time de Verecil, and a Meapoluan nobleman, Giovanni Francesco by nobles and scholars, among others by Benedetto Gusano at Chinja It grew wider, and its meetings were attended This petty persecution was salutary to the Christian circle

[#] This is the person whom Flam nlo ment one in a letter to Galeaxzo printed in Schleims Amerik Eccles in p 132 defamines Franciscus magna lietina affect me \mathcal{L}_{c}

he saw the illustrious Neapolitan refugee, exclaimed with emotion: 'Here is a man of ancient house and great parentage, flourishing in honors and in goods, having a noble and virtuous wife, a family of children, quiet and peace in his house, in short, happy in everything that concerns the state of this life, but who has voluntarily abandoned the place of his birth to stand beneath the banner of Christ. He made no difficulty in leaving his lordship, a fertile and pleasant country, a great and rich patrimony, a convenient, comfortable, and cheerful palace; he broke up his household, he left father, wife, children, relations, and friends, and after abandoning so many allurements of the world, he is content with our littleness, and lives frugally according to the habits of the commonalty — neither more nor less than any one of us.'*

In the select society which gathered round Valdez, there were also, as at Thessalonica in the days of St. Paul, of the chief women not a few. Among these high-born dames was Vittoria Colonna, widow of that famous general the Marquis of Pescara, a woman illustrious for her beauty, and her talent, whose poems were much admired at the time, and in whose society, the poet Bernardo Tasso, father of him who wrote the 'Jerusalem Delivered,' and Cardinal Bembo, learned some of the truths of the Gospel. There also might be seen Isabella di Bresegna, to whom Curione dedicated the works of Olympia Morata; but above all Guilia di Gonzaga, widow of Vespasiano Colonna, Duke of Trajetto,† the most beautiful woman in Italy. So great was the reputation of her beauty in Europe, and even beyond it, that Barbarossa the corsair determined to carry her off. Having undertaken in 1534 to terrify Naples, he suddenly appeared before that city with a hundred sail, and landing near Fondi, between Gaeta and Terracina, where the duchess was living on her estate, he tried to surprise her; but she escaped the bird of ^{*} Calvin to Signor Galeazzo Caraccioli, a man of noble birth, and still more renowned for the excellence of his virtues than for the nobility of his family, the only son and lawful heir to the Marquis of Vico.—Dèdicace de la 1^{ére} Epître aux Corinthiens: Commentaires.

[†] Trajetto, the ancient Minturnæ. where Marius hid himself.

proy, though not without difficulty. This ritempt was one of the motives which determined Chrites to underfake the wayedition to Turne. It is thus that men and women, of whom the 16th century is proud, adorned the evangebeal enrely of Chrisps.

While Valdez reposed on the beautiful hilb of Pausihppe, in the midst of ornage and figures, and in themids with consignation of ornage and figures, and not unfrequently the thoughts with which he was busy found the subject of interesting conversations with literal—cocupied a mind, it once eminently original and them —cocupied a mind, it once eminently original and offersition. Virgil's tomb, which was situated a few paces of, might have suggested other thoughts the dying poet in mid ordered the following words to be earred on his sepualonic

The county his one lie warks explois which the prides.

The country his one live great attractions to meny minds, but the versions at Patushippe, whose bislory we are relating that the versions and consersed on topics adviced it is duty to record.

the sons of Adam ?—Why is the state of a Cold offert, they acked, 'flow the sons of Adam ?—Why is the state of Dim who believes with buffelly before them that of Dim who deleves with case ?—Why does God gree a child to a Chiri man and tend them whom God takes away the love of the world, and to whom Me grees the love of God, experiences nearly the same thing as he who ceases of God, experiences nearly the same times as he who ceases of God, experiences mently is the sign of a cull from God—Them when the man and beginning the form of the Moly Spirit, and like those who will be form the man and beginning the man and the form of the Moly Spirit, and like those who walk by might but of the Holy Spirit, and like those who walk by might without the light of the sun. — How can God make himself felt, and how can he permit himself to be seen? — The evils of curiosity, and how we ought to read the Scriptures without curiosity. — Why are the superstitious severe, while true Christians are merciful? — How God reigns by Christ, and Christ is the head of the Church. — The three kinds of conscience: that of the natural law, that of the written law, and that of the Gospel. —Is justification the fruit of piety, or piety the fruit of justification? — How does it happen that the wicked cannot believe, that the superstitious believe easily, and that pious men believe with difficulty? — How to resist the imaginations which confuse our Christian faith.' — Such are some of the thoughts with which the noblest minds were then busy on the enchanting shores of the bay of Naples.*

The sermons of the celebrated Occhino helped to give a wider circulation to the thoughts which engrossed the evangelicals of Chiaja. In the early part of 1536, the great orator of Italy was invited to Naples to preach the Lent course. Valdez immediately felt the living faith by which the orator was animated: he became intimate with him, and introduced him to the Christian circle around him. The well-known name of Occhino, his strange appearance, his coarse dress, and reputation for holiness, attracted an immense crowd to the church of S. Giovanni Maggiore. He seemed called to scatter among the people the religious ideas which Valdez and Peter Martyr were propagating among the noble and the learned. De Vio, Cardinal of Gacta, before whom Luther had appeared, was a man of singular perspicacity, and he immediately suspected heresy.† Struck with the power of the three doctors, he fancied he saw the formation of a league, one of those triumvirates which de-

^{*} The Cento e dieci divine Considerationi of Giovanni Valdesso (Juan Valdez) were published at Halle in Saxony in 1860 by Edward Boshmer Each of the meditations occupies from two to ten pages. They have been reprinted recently at Madrid in Spanish.

^{† &#}x27;Cajetanus, perspicaci vir ingenio, rem odorari corpit.' -- Caracciolo. Vita Pauli IV.

agitated more and more every day by the powerful words

That voung woman, who e heart was wrung by sorrow, was It was caster to draw tears from Giulia Gonzaga's eyes. 1 qoow sonois rad as he went out . That mond would make the very He was surprised and struck by Occhino's eloquence, and went like the rest to the church of S Giovanni Maggiore emperor having heard much of the great orator of Italy, meet at court or hall, they probably met at church The at those which nere given to Charles V If they did not the great lady, the ornament of every fete, did not appear the awakening of her mind estranged her from the court, the honor done to her in Africa. Besides, her troubles and he pillaged, hut Giulia would willingly have dispensed with of sinul qu syre sed and was ber when he gave up I unis to that the monarch and the daughter of Gonzaga should meet emperor arrived, and held a brilliant court. It was natural to Maples might have diverted her from these thoughts the from her sorrow. An event which at this time gave spleador tion in God, and hoped to find in Occhino's words a relief norldly indifference in which she had hved, sought consolainheritance Giulia, roused by her verations from the daughter in law, went to few with her for a portion of ber Lurgi's widow, Isabella Colonna, who was also the duchess's had been taken from his sister, perished in the as rull, and trouble her brother Luigh wishing to recover a easile that them She was at that time suffering under great dome to

The beautiful Duchess of Tryetto did not miss one of of the nobility and people, attended Occhmo's sermonnot only the Christian society of Naples, but a great crond Institution of the sinner. The cardinal protested in vain gitory, the power of the sovereign pontiff, freewill, and the starting novelty, and even of detestable impiety about pur happe of Saran, * he sad, 'are enculating doctrines of et o) cd the Roman republic 'These trumuns of the reof the great preacher; and it was at this time that the Christian life truly began in her. One day, as she was leaving the church of S. Giovanni Maggiore, Juan Valdez observed her emotion, and accompanied her to her palace. The stricken and agitated widow begged him to stay and enlighten her, and made known to him the distress, the hopes, and the struggles of her soul. Valdez felt that he was called to disperse the darkness in the midst of which Giulia was struggling, and the conversation lasted till evening. The Duchess of Trajetto desired to have nothing more to do with the world, but as yet she had not tasted the peace of God. 'Ah!' she exclaimed to Valdez, 'there is a combat within me. The monk's words fill me with fear of hell, but I fear evil tongues also. Occhino inspires me with love for paradise, but I feel at the same time a love for the world and its glory. How can I escape from the contest under which I am sinking? Is it by harmonizing these two ten dencies, or by rejecting one of them? Pray show me the way; I promise to follow it.' Valdez replied that the agitation she felt was occasioned by the renewing of the image of God in her. 'The law has wounded you,' he said, 'the Gospel will heal you; for if the Law gives death, the Gospel gives life.* What I fear,' he continued, 'is lest you should attempt to regulate your Christian life in such a manner that those about you should not remark any change in you.' The duchess confessing that such was her secret wish, Valdez told her to choose between God and the world, adding: 'I will show you the path of perfection: Love God above everything, and your neighbor as yourself.' - 'Your words surprise me,' she said; 'I have heard all my life that ^{*} Abecedario espiritual, fols. 11-12. Valdez gives a full report of this conversation in his Spiritual Abecedary, which he so called because it was intended to teach the elements of Christian perfection. There is no doubt as to the genuineness of the dialogues he reports, for the duchess asked him to commit what he had said to her to paper. Did Valdez, when doing so, complete any of his answers? It is very possible. In Herzog's Encyclopædia, M. Bæhmer has given an extract from this dialogue, much longer than the limits of this history will permit us to do.

stroyed the Bom in republic. "These trumwirs of the republic of Satian," be send, 'are circulating doctrines of strathing novelty, and even in detestable impact about pur guerry, the power of the soverenge points, freewill, and the justification of the snner. The cartinal protested in vain not only the Christian society of Maples, but a great cro a not only the Christian society of Maples, but a great cro or of the nobitity and people, attended Occlimo's scenaror.

It was easier to draw tears from Giulia Gonzagas eyes f qoan sonota said as he went out 'That monk nould make the very He was surprised and struck by Occhmo's eloquence, and nent like the rest to the church of S Giovanni Maggiore emperor having beard much of the great orator of Italy, meet at court or ball, they probably met at church at those which were given to Charles V If they did not the great lady, the ornament of every fete, did not appear the awakening of her mind cetranged her from the court, the honor done to her in Africa. Besides, her troubles and be pillaged, but Giulia would willingly bavo dispensed with for he had desired to avenge ber when he gave up Tunis to the monarch and the daughter of Gonzaga should med emperor arrived, and held a brilliant court. It was natural to Maples might have diverted her from these thoughts the from her sorrow . An event which at this time gave splendor tion in God, and hoped to find in Occhino's words a relief norldly indifference in which she had lived, sought consolainheritance. Giulia, toused by her vexations from the daughter in law, went to law with her for a portion of her Luigi's nidow, Isabella Colonna, who was also the duchess s had been taken from his sister, perished in the as-sult, and trouble her brother Luigh, wishing to recover a castle that one She was at that time suffering under great domestic The beautiful Duchess of Tryletto did not miss one of

It nas exist to arm terr from citum conregus of server. That voung woman, whose heart was wrung by sorrow, will argitized more and more every dry by the powerful words of the great preacher; and it was at this time that the Christian life truly began in her. One day, as she was leaving the church of S. Giovanni Maggiore, Juan Valdez observed her emotion, and accompanied her to her palace. The stricken and agitated widow begged him to stay and enlighten her, and made known to him the distress, the hopes, and the struggles of her soul. Valdez felt that he was called to disperse the darkness in the midst of which Giulia was struggling, and the conversation lasted till evening. The Duchess of Trajetto desired to have nothing more to do with the world, but as yet she had not tasted the peace of God. 'Ah!' she exclaimed to Valdez, 'there is a combat within me. The monk's words fill me with fear of hell, but I fear evil tongues also. Oechino inspires me with love for paradise, but I feel at the same time a love for the world and its glory. How can I escape from the contest under which I am sinking? Is it by harmonizing these two ten deneies, or by rejecting one of them? Pray show me the way; I promise to follow it.' Valdez replied that the agitation she felt was occasioned by the renewing of the image of God in her. 'The law has wounded you,' he said, 'the Gospel will heal you; for if the Law gives death, the Gospel gives life.* What I fear,' he continued, 'is lest you should attempt to regulate your Christian life in such a manner that those about you should not remark any change in you.' The duehess confessing that such was her secret wish, Valdez told her to choose between God and the world, adding: 'I will show you the path of perfection: Love God above everything, and your neighbor as yourself.' -- 'Your words surprise me,' she said; 'I have heard all my life that ^{*} Abecedario espiritual, fols. 11-12. Valdez gives a full report of this conversation in his Spiritual Abecedary, which he so called because it was intended to teach the elements of Christian perfection. There is no doubt as to the genuineness of the dialogues he reports, for the duchess asked him to commit what he had said to her to paper. Did Valdez, when doing so, complete any of his answers? It is very possible. In Herzog's Encyclopædia, M. Bæhmer has given an extract from this dialogue, much longer than the limits of this history will permit us to do.

^{* &#}x27;Ill Satantes republics trumen "- bed * Sadolen Pret p 508 Schrub, Kirchengendichte, n. p 780

Such evangeleal sentiments, uttered by a Spaniard in a resentance Yes, God himself has pardoned all my sins ! by your sins, you would not bestrate to eay with perfect of Christ, then, even while suffering under the pain enused . Ah l Madam, if you accept with full faith the words . that you are not quite sure, however God had pardoned all your sins, you would say that you reply, You' but if you were asked whether you beheved nicther you delieved in the articles of the faith, you would faith '-- 'Tako care,' rejoined Valdez, 'if you were asked -, Ali 1' exclusined the duchess, 'I will yield to no one in beves must not bave the slightest doubt of his salvation.* erys He that believes shall be sated, the di ciple ho behoundless confidence to every word of God When Christ that which proceeds from God a grace, and which chags with she de of faith, Madam, I mean that which lives in the soul, charity. L'aith is the tree, charity the fiuit. But nhen I Tire is needed to give warmib, a living faith to produce he said, 'only when they are done by a mentled person perfection, is produced in the heart. Our works are good," deretind the only means by which that charity, which is and not an atom more. Vuldez then tried to make her un perfection except so far as they possess the love of God, on, replied Valdez firmly, 'the monks have no Christian montactic vows alone lead to perfection "- Let them say

Such evangetical sentiments, uttered by a Spannard in a palace at Naples, and received with humility by a Gouzaga. The Araples, and received with humility by a Gouzaga receive betone or ean be exaded. Consenence spoke in Guilla. We have here a woman whose family had given many severagas to Italy and princesses to royal houses, the number of Courted among its manners framly and the chief of the most among its manners in the penneals, which has counted among its manners are the penneals, which has counted among its manners framly and the colebrated Popo cardinals, illustrous generals, and the colebrated Popo and the Gouzaga, nonched by gives, lent an allow of the Gouzaga, nonched by gives, lent an anti-ear to the truth with more humility than her own servants: she had become a little child. If the Acts of the Apostles remark more than once that among the persons converted to Christ in Asia and in Greece, where St. Paul prenched, were women of distinction, history will also remark that at the epoch of the Reformation of the sixteenth century the wave mounted from the lowest levels of the shore to the highest peaks. Or rather, the hills did bow before it.

^{*} therefore experience for the point Valdez sequeto in harmony with the reformers

^{23 103} PAGE $

Valdez having spoken of a 'path,' the duchess manifested a desire to know it. 'There are three paths,' he answered, 'which lead to the knowledge of God: the natural light which teaches us the omnipotence of God; the Old Testament, which shows us the Crentor as hating iniquity; and lastly, Christ, the sure, clear, and royal way. Christ is love; and accordingly, when we know God through him, we know him as a God of love. Christ has made satisfaction for sin. An infinite God alone could pay an infinite debt. But it is not sufficient to believe it, we must experience it also.'*

'Devote some time every day,' continued Valdez, 'to meditation on the world, on yourself, on God, and on Jesus Christ, without binding yourself to it in a superstitious manner; do it in liberty of spirit, selecting any of your rooms that may seem most convenient, perhaps even as you lie awake in bed. Two images should be continually before your eyes: that of Christian perfection and that of your own imperfection. These books will eause you to make greater progress in a day than any others would in ten years. Even the Holy Scriptures, if you do not read them with that humility which I point out to you, might become poison to your soul.'†

'Listen to preaching with a humble mind,' continued Valdez.—'But,' said Giulia, 'if the preacher is one of those who, instead of preaching Christ, give ntterance to vain and foolish things, drawn from philosophy or some empty theology—one of those who tell us dreams and ^{*} Abecedario espiritual, fols. 36, 37, 38.

[†] Ibid, fols. 44, 45, 47, 50, 52, 52

Lutheranism When the emperor left Naples shortly after all intercourse with those infected with or only suspected of they could not understand, had published an edict forbidding the priests who were growing alarmed at a movement which ficult moment. Some days before, Charles V, excited by Trajetto and in many others at Naple, happened at a dif-The religious averlening then going on in the Duchess of and that was the coominal thing heart -- were clearly land down by the Spanish gentleman, Christ on the cross, and that which He accomplishes in the prominent, yet the two great Christian facts - the work of pld the Holy Scriptures do not occupy a place sufficiently tinged either with a mystic or a Roman color, and possi there discover some alight shades not strictly exangelical, structions given by this pious layman we may here and at add at trad oldiscoq at M luos sad lin allaw and of Mas Conzagas sat in spirit at her Saviour's feet, and gave her out for her the order of saleation, that the daughter of the It was during these solemn hours, when Valdez traced

† werbdur aH to morrow I will ask how you have found yourself shortit. madain, from this very moment pray follow my advice, and

Farewell, same time he is the servant ofnes death, he is the absolute master of his affections, but at the bar are dentitived free from the tyrangy of an apparate Christian liberty?' - The true Christian, replied the more before you go, she said, 'what use must I make of desired to leave, but she detained him 'Only two words h ippiness, and fe us to go astray in the new path. Valdez duchees n as lake a person who has discovered the road to

The day was coming to an end when Valdez ro e the as you have described, and hence it rarely happens to me . are to me those which I waste in hetening to preachers such do what seems hest. The worst moments of all the year fibles -- would you have me follow him?' -- ' In that ease, (22 March, 1536), the viceroy, driven onwards by the same influence, and ascribing to Occhino's eloquence a religious agitation which was so novel in the Parthenopean city, interdicted the preaching of that great orator; but his eloquence and energy, backed by his numerous friends and the protests of those who so liked to hear him, prevailed. He was able to continue the course of his sermons, and did not end them until Easter (April 16). The Duchess of Trajetto, without leaving the church, endeavored more and more to walk in that new path which Valdez had shown her; the latter zealously directed her, and not long after dedicated to her a translation of the Psalms from the Hebrew, with a practical explanation. Somewhat later he published Commentaries on the Epistles of Paul to the Romans and to the Corinthians.*

In this charming circle at Chiaja, and among the habitual guests of Valdez, Vittoria Colonna, and Giulia Gonzaga, was a patrician of Florence, as distinguished by his person as by the important offices he had filled: he was Pietro Carnesecchi.† Although for a long time placed as near as possible to the pontifical throne, he found a strange and indefinable charm in the conversations of Valdez, attended with pleasure the sermons of Occhino, drew light from the lamp of Peter Martyr, formed a close friendship with Galeazzo Caraccioli, and was touched by that mixture of grace, intelligence, humility, faith, and good works then to be found in some of the most distinguished women of Italy. As soon as Charles V. arrived at Naples, he desired Carnesecchi to come and see him. The noble Florentine was surprised at the order, but the emperor's motive was this. Carnesecchi, a native of the city of the Medicis, was early distinguished by his writing, and particularly by that penetrating mind which knowledge of polite literature, by his talent in the art of BOOK AIL THE REPORTATION IN LURGIT ₹4₹

^{*} These Commentaries have recently been reprinted in Spain.

^{† &#}x27;Convictus quod in Italia, cum Victoria Colonna Marchionis Piscarii vidua et Julia Gonzaga, lectissimis alioquin feminis, de pravitate sectaria suspectis, amicitiam coluisset, tandem ad ignem damnatus.' — De Thou, ad annum 1567. Schelhorn, Amænitates Ecclesiasticæ, ii. p. 187.

[‡] The name of Carnesecchi still exists in Florence: the Latin documents which we use give it under the form of Carneseca.

The death of Clement VII broke the golden chains which beams of evrigeleal light were darming upon his soul to ally lumself too intimately with it, possibly, also, the first put after he had seen the papacy closely, he probably feared refused This is surprising, for he was naturally ambitious, sy "la od dudy tad s'trachian a and bondho somi trio 109 Pietro Carnesecchi rather than by Clement' The pope erally sand that the positiones was at that time filled by the direction of the Church to Camesecchi, and it was genwith Charles V, Prancis I and Henry VIII, committed minence Clement, who had so much in do with pointes, accepted it, and soon found lumeelf in possession of great vitation would open a nable career before him, he therefore that time no evangelical convictions, he thought that the inappointing him secretary to the new pontiff. Haring at the name of Clement VII, Carnesecchi received a measuge favor of the Medicis, and when Juhus became pope, under ph imbosing gravity By these qualities he gamed the modesty, purity, sobriety, and admirable and iness tempered all the more because with nobility of features he combined more useful career His fine countenance struck observers tion with the most eminent men, with the view of running a desire for great things, and had placed himself in connecthe obscurest matters From his early youth he had felt a can discern the secret springs of events and see clear in so much talked about in Italy ‡ The treasures of truth the for a time in the society of those men of God who were hills of Chaga, he went to Maples with the desire of remainand, attracted by the mild hght which was shining over the were beginning to oppress Carnesecchi He quitted Rome,

4 , Loutingcatum illina temporia magia a Letro Carneseca gert quam a вистьоп и беневьотии Авмени. Luterer ж р 1201 capid tas verum magnarum - Notice of Cancrarus the friend of Me-* Literarum bonarum scientia ad persp cientium acerrimi sensus and life which he found there surpassed his expectations. But suddenly the command of Charles V. disturbed him in the midst of the Christian joy by which his soul was filled. What did the phissant emperor want with him? Did he design to open once more that career of politics and glory which he, Carneseechi, had renounced forever? Was there some political scheme brewing, or did Charles V. desire to become a disciple of the Gospel? Carnesecchi could not make it out, but he went to the palace all the same, The emperor had a very different object: knowing full well that the Florentine had been initiated into all the thoughts of Clement VII., he desired to learn what schemes that pope had formed with Francis I, at Marseilles." In that interview Carnesecchi did not forfeit the confidence which Clement had reposed in him; he did not violate the fidelity he had sworn,† but answered the emperor with a nobleness and respect which quite won the esteem of that prince. Francis I., however, when he heard of this conference at Naples, was exasperated; it seemed to him that the kindness he had shown Carneseechi during the famous interview at Marseilles should have led him to refuse his, rival's invitation, and he confiscated the revenues of an abbey which Carnesecchi possessed in France. The Medicis, however, and even Catherine, having known this excellent man well, never withdrew their esteem from him, although he was everywhere decried as a heretic.

Comercians in schell orn America Lateror x p 1203 t Carnescea commoratus al quantulum un regno Mespolitano -Clemente - Comerarus in Schelhorn Amen i Literar x p 1202

However great was the honor of a conference with Charles V., Carnesecchi much preferred those he had with Valdez, Peter Martyr, and Occhino. These pious men were not content with vain babbling: they read the Holy Scriptures together, enlightened each other on their meaning, and carefully compared one passage with another.‡

^{*} Carolum V. accereisse Carnesecam, ut ex ipso eliceret arcana consilia pontificis Clementis, que hic credebatur cum Francisco rege Galliarum Massilie inivisse.' — Ibid.

^{† &#}x27;Tune etiam boni viri officium neutiquam violavit.' - Ibid.

^{‡ &#}x27;Cum quibus de saerarum literarum lectione et intelligentia disserere conferreque accurate solebat.' — Schelhorn, Amænit. Literar. x. p. 1204.

hunded down to us nu Holy Scripture . These doctrines no quihority except the Word of God, which has been by the Son of God at so great a price. We must submit to the resurmee of enlyation, because it was purchased for us in the work and love of a crucified Saviour. We can have coult say 'Certainly Justification proceeds from faith alone was put to death by the pope Looking unto Christ, be belore the college of carehnals, and on account of which he He believed in those truths which he afterwards confessed monarchs in Lurope, ant humbly at the foot of the cross. by turns the object of the attentions of the two greatest bound Ere long the influential secretary of Clement VII, he was one of those noble spirits who attain their end at a not oscillate for 3 cars in doubt between light and darkness, Christ. A gleam of hght shone anto his heart He did thought which make rapid progress in the knowledge of Carnesceelt had that love of truth and that boldness of BOOK AIF

the others, and became a persecutor These two groups, came pope under the name of Paul IV, fell lower than all we shall mention presently One of them Caraffa, who be Devene Lose the most distinguished of whom (Contarni) cluded many of those who had belonged to the oratory of have come to a tragge end As for the second group, it in How oels at that eladorq at it begander that he also would the first group, and no doubt Valdez also, and if his bid posts in the Church Carnescecht and Paleario belonged to in Romanism some of them even rising to the highest a hierarchical tendency, who, though religious, still remained ended their lives in exile or at the stake, and men of vival of Italy the independent Christians, all of whom Two groups of prous men took part at this time in the reples with Valdez and Peter Martyr and filled with sweetness the intercourse he enjoyed at Ma formed from that hour the happiness of his eminent spirit,

tradito - Schelhorn Amanit Eccles it pp 197 202 Nulls credendum n si Verbo Del in Sacris Ser pluris Tutsdad Grat m et salutis certifudo * Justificat o per solain fidem

however, did not include all the Italians who were touched by the Reformation. Between them were many truly Christian people, who, as regards faith, were with the evangelicals, but as regards the Church, clung to Rome through dread of falling into what they called schism. number was Flaminio, one of Valdez' best friends. He was born between Ferrara and Florence, but we meet with him in the south. Political disturbances having broken out at Imola in the early part of the sixteenth century, one of the burgesses of that city, named Flaminio, who had acquired a. reputation in literature, fled hastily, earrying with him a very young child, and took refuge in a castle in the Venetian territory.* That child was Marco Antonio Flaminio, and his flight was almost a type of what his whole life would beone of anguish, and often of pressing want. When he grew older, he went to study at Padua, where he displayed very remarkable poetic talents. 'His poems,' it was afterwards said, 'possess all the simplicity and grace of Catullus, but untainted with his license. They penetrate into the soul with their wonderful sweetness.' With the gifts, Flaminio also shared the adversities of the poet. He was often greatly straitened during his studentship, and his university friends had to subscribe to supply him with clothes.† Whatever were the hardships of his position and the weakness of his health, he worked assiduously and made great progress in philosophy and the study of languages, and attained a thorough knowledge of the Foets and orators. At the same time, trial was telling upon his soul: his literary and philosophical studies could not satisfy him. Shut up in his little room, he said to himself 'that there was a science higher than that of Cicero and Plato, the science of the sacred writings, the knowledge of divine things handed down to strength, and entered, as soon as he was well, the household Plantino went into the Vencium campagna to recover bis ill and nearly died § pear up agranst the severance of the ascette prelate, he fell the labor attractive, ‡ but his constitution heng too werk to latter applied sealously to his work, and endervored to make make a translation and commentary of the Pealms combining labor with ascetto practices, desired his guest to hy which Giberto hoped to attain his end. The hisbop, hat with its red cords, followed, however, the rough paths ceedingly austere life, Flammo, who cared nothing for the cause he wished to be made a cardiant, had adopted an ex-This prelate, perhaps from devotion, but perhaps also hethus revived the doctrine of the Greek fathers in Europe.' had published the Homilies of Chrysostom on St Paul, and Bishop Giovanni Matteo Giherto, who esteemed learning, Venice, and Veronz, and was received in the last city by the hidden with Christ in God He visited in succession Bome, world, and, disdaining empty decorations, preferred a life the spiritual heights of faith more than the elevations of the eccle-instical dignity and earthly distinction; but he loved chandise He might, as he grew older, have uttained high idea of making a trade of his books, as if they were merconsiderable sums for his writings, but he could not bear the life to the salvation of souls' † He might have received desire to adore the eternal God with ferror, and devote my It is the goal I set before me, he ead he longed for in the mid-t of his poverty. The study of as hy the everlasting Word. * Such was the only treasure literarum, id est, rerum divinarum Verbo Des mieruo proditarum --* . Veram et salutarent sapientiam esse atatusset cognitionem sacrarum

^{*&#}x27;Puerum parvulum cum patre fugiente turbulentam dissentionem civium suorum.' — Camerarius in Schelhorn, Amænit. Literar. x. p. 1149.

^{† &#}x27;Adolescentem tueamur, in vestiario tantum laboramus.' - Longoli Epist. lib. iv. fol. 271.

t, Com Cipertus pontilex Veronensis, homo literatum divinsium Camerarius in Schelhorn, Amanu Lucrar & p 1150

rum in Schelhorn, Amonit Lucrar x. p 1153

Fr tum factum est ut in penculosum morbum incideret. - Camera-Psalmorum Explanatio Lugdum, 1516 prest 12 ac dilucide interpretarer, studiose istum laborem suscept' - Flamin i amantissimus a me summo studio contenderet ut hymnos Davidis breviter

of another future eardinal, Giovanni Pietro Caraffa, Bishop of Chieti. Caraffa, a violent and impetuous man, and afterwards, when pope, under the name of Paul IV., the restorer of the inquisition and of the strictest Roman-eatholicism, had had his seasons of struggle and even of faith in the truth. Oppressed by the agitation caused within him by his ardent and fanatical nature, he often felt that he would never find peace except by sacrificing his will to that of God; and this it was that bound him to Flaminio. Unhappily, his evil nature afterwards prevailed. Caraffa being made cardinal, went to Rome, and Flaminio to Naples, at the time when Valdez, Peter Martyr, Carneseechi, and their friends were there.

Association with these pious men was of great use to Flaminio: he had been prepared to seek God by adversity, by siekness, and by the approach of death; in his intercourse with the Christians of Pausilippo he learnt the way of peace. 'God,' he said, 'does not call those happy who are clear from every stain; alas! there is not one! but those whom his mercy pardons, because they believe with all their heart that the blood of our Lord Jesus Christ is the atonement for all sin. If our conscience accuses as before the tribunal of God, if death is imminent, let us still be full of hope, for the mercy of the Supreme Ruler infinitely exceeds the wickedness of the whole human race.' having dedicated his book on the Psalms to the famous eardinal Farnese, he boldly confessed his faith before that grandson of Paul III. 'Herein will be found,' he said, 'many things about Christ, our Lord and our God; his bitter death and his everlasting kingship; - his death, by which, sacrificing himself on the cross and blotting ont all our sins by his most precious blood, he has reconciled us with God - his kingship, by which He defends us against the eternal enemy of the human race, and, governing us by his Spirit, leads us to a blessed and immortal life.' *

^{*&#}x27;Nos Deo reconciliavit, se ipsum in cruce immolans, et omnia peccata nostra suo purissimo sanguine delens.' — Flaminii Psalmorum Explicatia (Epistola nuncupatoria Alex. Farnesio, Cardinali

the greater half of my soul? thee, I shall be ever with thee, I shall leave theo always me of the sweetness of thy friendship I shall remain with neither time, nor distance, nor death itself, shall deprive from thee, O dear Carnescechi, ho said in conclusion, sations of the Chagat 'Although I must now depart far which indicate the charms of the sweet and serious converhis friend in a graceful little poem, the very first lines of and n hen they were forced to separate, Planunio addressed their difference, they remained united in close affection, SmbnstadirwtoM † thish uset forth to Vormibatanding tuns entered into a correspondence on the subject which real one Still, it was not until later that these two Christhe sacrifice offired once for all at Golgotha, as the only which Flaminio defended, but to which Carnescelli opposed sent (catholicus consensus) and the sacrifice of the mass, emment men had serrous discussions about universal concolved to walk in the paids of the Gospel These two main in the Roman Church, Carnesecchi was still more relogical, and more practical While Flaminio desired to rewere less quich, but his understanding was elearer, more agmation than the poet of Imola, and perhaps his feelings astic in his affection as Valdez He had a less glowing imchi also appreciated Planamo, but without being so enthusiwhom I feel the greatest love and admiration. Carnesceaccustoned to say 'Of all men, Flaminio is the one for the beauty of his genius, and the liveliness of his faith, was Valdez, charmed by the sumplicity of I lammo's character, minimized by a further are one one are strained responsible of the control of q exhant, arrestal, gradialog. un mad? awaylars of'155 and larged to the control confidence are the properties of the control confidence in the control of the cont

O mores faciles I O Mt corum Conding sale collectiones I Cham vos agre samme et laborioso Quantis cum lacip mis miser relieguo I * Schelborn, Assonit. Literar x p 1109

Flaminio returned to Rome, and Reginald Pole, cousin to Henry VIII., who was then in the city, endeavored to gain for the papacy a man whose value he appreciated. intercourse of Flaminio with Caraffa and Polo had an unfortunate influence upon him. Somewhat later he said to Carnesecchi: 'O my friend, if we do not wish to be wrecked in the midst of the dangerous breakers that surround as, let us bend humbly before God, and permit no motive, however lawful it may appear, to separate us from the catholic Church.' * Since that time, Romish and evangelical writers have continually disputed possession of him, each affirming that he belonged to them: he belonged entirely to neither. He was able to keep himself evenly balanced between the two powers that then disputed the sovereignty of Christendom, and did not fall into the abyss. But, whatever men may say, if the reformers had desired to follow that middle path which pleases certain minds, it would assuredly have been fatal to truth and liberty. Christendom would have fallen back into the servility of the middle ages; and if the yoke had appeared too heavy, it would have plunged into the license of incredulity. The narrow path of evangelical truth runs between these two gulfs: it is a refuge to those whom they threaten to swallow up.

Among the Italians affected by the religious movement there were many who clung to the papacy still more than Flaminio did. The scepticism which had been fushionable at the pontifical court had brought about a reaction, to which, no doubt, the writings of the reformers contributed. The wave, uplifted at Wittemberg, Zurich, and Cambridge, descending gradually towards the sonth, reached as far as Rome, and touched the gates of the Vatican. The men who there received the doctrine of grace in their hearts, seeing religion weakened and public worship decayed, united to found in the Trastevere—in the very spot where it was said the first Christians had assembled, and where St. Peter had dwelt—that Oratory of Divine Love which among nhom were Regunald Pole, who e opposition to the They were afterwards joined by a number of eminent men, Lippomano, who attained a bigh reputation by his writings Leo X., who made him Bishop of Carpentras in 1517, and and mas canonized, Sadolet, born at Modena, secretury to founded in 1524 the order of regular Clerks or Theatines, patrons - Giberto and Caraffs, Gaetano di Tluene, who them were two priests, who were afterwards Unmino's crossing the Tiber and ascending the Trastevere Among dured unto the end On certain days they might be seen geheal spint, but there were others whose hying piety ensome the hierarchical tendency ulumately stifled the evanof that Christian association They were not all able vester, in which their meetings were held, was the centre laymen, and Julio Baths, rector of the church of St Salwere between fifty and sixty in number, ecclesiastics and forces to preserve the divine law in its purity . They was to be a kind of citadel in which they could rally their TOOK III 38¢ study of Scripture, and planily ascribed the justification of clossier of St. Benedict, he passed days and nights in the tic life nas Gioranni Battista Tolengo In liis cell in the most striking example of this semi evangelical, semi monashe had drawn the spurital malk of the Word But the who appears to have been the monk from whom Pole 4138 monasteries, and among their number was Marco of Padus, These were to be found particularly in the Benedictine the revival, many a monk shut up in his convent shared in parts, were not the only persons who falt the influence of These men, most of whom nere called to play important one whom we must soon speak of at greater length

^{*} Protonotario Carnesecæ.' - Schelhorn Amanit. Eccles. p. 154.

Maggiore, near Venice, and many more, among whom was men of letters, Gregono Cortess, Abbot of San Giorgio Pietro Bembo, who-e bouse at Padua was the resert of work of Henry VIII had forced hun to leave Lingland,

⁰⁷⁻L dd During Amore. - Caracciolo, Vita de Paolo IV Vila C jatore Ibrenat, L. * Cost malitato il culto divino, si unimono in un oratorio chiamato del

the sinner to grace alone. The good Benedictine was punctual in attending matins, in fasting, in singing mass, and in eonfessing; but he earnestly exhorted the faithful not to put their trust in fasts, or in the mechanical repetition of the prayers prescribed by the church, or in confession, or in the mass. He was a monk and a priest, in subjection to the dignities of the Church; but, like a prophet, he hurled the flashes of his burning eloquenec against the priesthood, the tonsure, and the mitre. He called for the reform of the Church; he loved evangelical Christians; he would have wished, in his profound charity, to remnite them with the flock. He published commentaries on the Epistles of St. Peter, St. James, and St. John; and his noble style, as well as the elevation of his Christian thoughts, caused them to be read with cagerness; but the Court of Rome, irritated by the liberty with which he expressed his faith, put his book in the Index Expurgatorius. The truth of the Latin saying — habent sua futa libelli was then manifested. Folengo hav ing written a commentary on the Psalms, expressed in it his evangelical views with great decision, especially in his remarks on the sixty-eighth Psalm. Strange to say, while his first work had been put in the Index by one pope, the second was reprinted by another pope (Gregory XIII.), with some corrections indeed, but with nothing that changed the general spirit of the work. More than one infallible pontiff has condemned what another infallible pontiff has approved of. The pious Folengo died at the age of sixty, in the same convent where he had taken the vows in his youth.* A man of piety less lively than Folengo's was destined to play a more important part in the affairs of the Church at the epoch of the Reformation.

At that famous sitting of the Diet of Worms in 1521, before which Martin Luther appeared, there was present among the ambassadors from the different states of Europe, who had come to congratulate the young emperor, a senator of Venice, by name Gasper Contarini. Eldest son of one pear, who discovered the cause Being sent as ambas ador one marked in their log, it was Contaring as it would apsufficed that the harries stolors than the barrenging the first voyage ever made round the world People were Spam, and was there when the ship Villoria returned from to the embasy of Worms, he accompanied the emperor to consideration. His iniscion to Charles V was not limited the questions under discussion, that he soon acquired great such simplicity and showed soch thorough knowledge of much nit, grace, or animation, he expressed him elf with length he took courage, and though he did not speak with and perhaps his timidity, prevented him from speaking. At tened to the deliberations of his colleagues his modesly, a member of the Venetian service. At first he eat and his first offices of the republic, and while still young he became by philosophical arguments. His birth called him to the mmortality of the soul by reven, Contarna established at philosopher liaving affirmed the impossibility of proving the celebrated Pomponature, who passed for an atheist That One of his first writings was directed against his master the * to baratenen bad of a science until he had mastered it repeating what he had done the day before He never to study, never more, never less, and each tune began by the diplomatist Contarum devoted three bours every day Noble impulses acted on the reformer, order prevailed with character of the nation, did not suit the Venetian's taste and the Reformation of Germany itself, stamped with the and mode of life Luther was displeasing to Contrinn, separated from each other as regards cultivation, character, cibies of religion and morality in common, were widely celebrated reformer. The e two men, who held many prinners, Contains was not favorably unpre-sed with the icate taste, exquisite judgment, elegant in his life and manmind formed by the study of philosophy and hterriture, delof the noble families of the republe, pos essing an elevated to the pope, after the sack of Rome, he effected a reconciliation between the pontiff and Charles V., and officiated at the coronation of the emperor by Clement VII.*

^{*} De Thou, Histoire, liv. xxiii. Le Mire de Scriptor. sæculi xvi., &c.

^{*} Joanns Cesse die Gropore Contorne, p. 28., Nanke, 160 mecke d'opne, k. p. 102. Nervog, Freyclopstus Ideologique.

Every one present at these points took notice of the Venetian ambassador, and a brilliant career seemed to lie before him. Men admired the rich gifts of his mind, the firmness and mildness of his character, the moral dignity and gravity which challenged respect. This was not all: a deep religious feeling had been developed early in his soul. At Rome he had joined the pions men who assembled at the Oratory of Divine Love on the Trastevere: he was fond of the meetings which so reminded him of those held by the disciples at Jerusalem in Mary's house.

One day, in the year 1535, when the senate of Venice had assembled for the elections, Contarini, at that time invested with one of the most important offices of the republic, was sitting near the balloting urn. On a sudden he was told that the pope had appointed him cardinal. The news surprised him exceedingly, and at first he would not believe it: he. a layman, the magistrate of a republic, and not known to the sovereign pontiff . . . to be nominated a cardinal, a prince of the Church! It appeared like a dream, and yet it was a reality. Paul III., having undertaken the task of bringing the protestants back to the Church, saw that he must employ for that purpose, not worldly prelates of the school of Leo X., but men of sincere piety; besides, Contarini had rendered services to the papacy, and hence he was invited to Rome. The report of his nomination eirenlated in a moment through the assembly, and his colleagues, leaving their places, gathered round to congratulate him. Even the senator who was at the head of the party opposed to him, his every-day antagonist, exclaimed, 'The republic has lost her best citizen.'

But in the midst of these congratulations Contarini remained undecided and silent. There was a struggle in his soul. He felt it difficult to leave his friends, the country of ^{*} Beccatello, Vita del Contarini, p. 103. Ranke, Römische Päpste, i. p. 153.

tas Contareno 3 Novemb 1536 By et p. 530 $\frac{1}{4}$ Ranke, Die Römische Popiete i p 150

Movern art. Conduryn.

† Gratulor thir quod hab turns e s locum tul et ingen i et annur in Christiann re publica util taie et commod s uber uscrapicandi — Sadols-

* Jean de la Case 1 te du Cardinal Contarna, Lettere Volgari, i "3.

Opposed to the deplotable elections which were customary think the cardinal s but constitutes my lughest bonor . ; run turned to the pontiff, and observed calmly 'I do not like to see another made equal to them in dignity' Conta know how men sail in these waters, the cardinals do not who was of a contrary opinion exclaimed 'les, yes! ne nation of a certain ecclesivatic to the eridinalate, the pope, and constant peace. One day, when he opposed the nome to be faithful to that internal truth which gave him sweet morre than the varying caprices of the Vatican He desired remain himself, to obey the roice of God in his conscience ployed in the service of his country, he was determined to to the catholic Church all the powers he had intherto em no desired to preservo his independence Ready to devote chrin should bind bind to the foot of the pontifical throno In becoming a cardinal, he did not intend that the golden of the Christian republic '† and wisdom more profitably for the necessites and adrantize ALOSE Zudojeć, pecause Jon can now employ your genus Joy, which they expressed to Contarna 'I congratulate you,' to see the Church animated by a new spirit were filled with of God? He accepted the offer * Such catholics as degred assembly which then claimed the support of all the servants critical hour, refuse his services and his life to that militant was expo ed to unprecedented danger Could he, in such a could see the finger of God in his appointment. The Church a world of smony and intrigue However, he believed he of passion, of living in the midst of a corrupt clergy, in putting lumself at the service of an autocrat, often the slave an honor enjoyed by seven of his family, he shrank from where he might aspire to the highest dignity, that of doge -his father, a free city, where he was among equals, and at Rome, the Venetian ardently desired to bring men of sound morals, learning, and piety into the sacred college. The pope, therefore, following his advice, gave the purple in succession to Sadolet, Caraffa, Giberto Bishop of Verona, Fregoso Archbishop of Salerno, and Reginald Pole. These new and strange elections seemed as if they would be favorable to the Gospel, but, on the contrary, they became the principle of a restoration of Romanism, and of a serious and ere long eruel resistance to the Reformation.

Contarini, the Melanethon of the papacy, set to work at once: he sincerely wished to reform the doctrines and morals of the Church, but to maintain it still under a sole chief. Like the reformers he laid great stress in religious matters on the positive side, but remained faithful to Roman-catholicism, by externating the negative side. 'Assuredly, the sinner is justified by grace through faith,' he would say to the evangelicals. 'But why pronounce so harshly against meritorious works?'-'A frank opposition to those practices,' they replied, 'can alone destroy the numberless abuses of popular superstition.' - 'Predestination,' said the cardinal again, 'belongs undoubtedly to God's mercy; by his grace He prevents all our movements, but at the same time the will must oppose no resistance. God has known from all eternity the predestined and the reprobate, but that knowledge does not take away either contingency or liberty.' -- 'We recognize man's responsibility,' answered the reformers; 'we believe that man must will to be saved, and yet we say with St. Paul: God worketh in us both to will and to do.' +

Contarini followed the same principle in his conversations with the champions of the papacy. 'The unity of the Church is necessary,' he said; 'to separate from it is the wildest error; but the cause of the sufferings of Christendom, the root of all the evil, is the unlimited authority

^{*}Contarini, De Prædestinatione. De Libero Arbitrio. Contarini's theological, philosophical, and political treatises were printed at Paris in 1571.
† Philippians ii. 13.

accribed by its adulators to the pontifical legislation A pope ought not to govern just as he pleases, but only in ac people ought not to govern just as he pleases, but only in a nide the laws of charity. Convenced that unity of fault would gradually be restored, he devoted all his efforts to remove from the Charity and entremove from the Charity in fault against amony, and adverance from the population of pressis the entertrained no doubt that stated the marriage of pressis. He entertrained no doubt that success would crown the loly work he had commenced by the shall see bereafter what became of it.

At the dawn of the Reformation, when the first gleams becalding the rising of the sun began to appear, they were probably nowhere mores brithen than in Italy, and nowhere foreicleaned a brighter day. Mens soois were mored by a foreicleaned a bright and as soois were mored by a purit from on bigh, and a new the smenties the present in the very stronghold of formalism that the adort in mes in the very stronghold of formalism that the adort was manifested with most liberty and grace Tron of God was manifested with most liberty and grace peared, and many rejoiced in their brightness peared, and many rejoiced in their brightness in the manifested with most liberty and grace peared, and many rejoiced in their brightness.

Rome still remained scated on her seven hills — with her sevend as a exconnumentations and her burning piles, but it seemed as t a new invasion——that of the Go-pel and of liberty—would repair all the an elucie committed by the invokacion one to the north, the other to the south of that ancient city On one safe was Yaples and the cump of Pauriappe, where a small but grillant entmy was assembled. A gentle light a mail but grillant entmy was assembled on present a sught, and everything led to the hope that a final and successful retory would ere long be gamed.

The other camp wes to the north I toould not boast of such sament men as those who was been are a coupled by an of Tarthenope The throne of Ferrar-was occupied by an entrast women and devoted Chinstina, the daughter of Louis XXII, who gave a welcome to all the flightne coldiers of Christ; and who had made it her business to build up the eity of God in Italy, and thus to work out, in a Christian manner, her father's device: Perdam Babylonis nomen. About this time she was expecting at her court a young divine, who had confessed Jesus Christ in France with energy, who had just written to Francis I. an eloquent and foreible letter, and published a book in which he had set forth the great doctrines of the faith in admirable order and in language of unequalled beauty. What would be the effect of his presence beyond the Alps? No one could say; but if the duchess had influence enough over her husband to make religious liberty prevail at Ferrara; if Calvin should settle in the birthplace of Savonarola, his faith, his talents, and his activity among a people already moved by the power of God, might gain a glorious victory for the truth.

Thus two great forces met face to face - Rome and the Gospel. Curione, Paleario, Peter Martyr, and many others, asked themselves what would be the issue of the struggle then preparing in Italy. Experiencing in themselves the power of God's Word, and seeing its marvellons effects around them, they doubted not that the Gospel would triumph in their country, as it had triumphed in other countries more to the north, and where, perhaps, less of light and life were to be found. The Reformation in Italy would doubtless present peculiar features, which, without disturbing Christian unity, would manifest national individuality. Episcopacy existed in England; the primate, Archbishop of Canterbury, remained on his throne, while submitting to the Word of God. Why might not a similar reform be effected in Rome itself? Not only evangelicals, such as Curione and Carneseechi, but pious catholics were full of hope. 'Ah!' they said; 'at the beginning of his reign the pope wonderfully excited all our expectations.* Putting aside institutions established by preceding popes, he resolved to conduct

^{* &#}x27;Is Paulus [tertius], sui pontificatus initio, spem atque expectationem omnium mirabiliter erexit.' — Florebelli vita Sadoleti cardinalis, p. 708.

Sedoleti Epist p 842.

† Conlarm Weizsacker Theod. Energedy † 'Egroiat enim corpus re pud en, et eo motob genera regrofat quod † 'Eschiam med anom respu t. — Kodolet to Conferent Idrael.

neass Bearin supposed making in the control of the

The heart shranks at the il ought, east into the fire square in Rome, there to be heherded and have their bodies runt priests, and conducted ignominously to some pubbe themselves condemned by cruel pontiffs maulted by 18110themselves constrained to escape beyond the Alps, or saw time, - those men, the flower of their nation, soon found read to enoritablic seen and best and most allestrones of their and exquirite cultivation, who held converso in the finest Italy, with minds of such netivity, with such varied learning it. Those men who would have been the regenerators of Church, suddenly turned upon it and endear ored to crush ndrancing and threatening to regenerate and delirer the her refrements ended in nothing that the Reformation was the stars more than ho did the Go pel, finding at last that dies prescribed for him ‡ Pope Paul III, who consulted of those which incline the sick man to reject the reme in Italy, was (to use the words of Cardinal Sadolet) one malady, with which the hody of the Church was affected works which the papacy had set up, and to purify the tem plo of God But the tunes of Rome were not accomplished The mainly, with which the body of the Church was affected mainly, with which the body of the Church was affected the supreme ponthiene in a holier manner, * and to accomeplial that task, be gallered round him men whom frame had pointed out as doctors excellent in risdom and niegerit's Containin believed in a reformation which, beginning nith the head, would purify all the members 'Gold', he said, 'trill not permit the gates of hell to prevail against his Holy Spirit He is about to accomplish something great in the Church it The atmosphere something great in the suit, and which rose higher and higher every day, appeared as if they would soon reduce to ashee the scaffolding of dead works which the papacy had set up, and to purify the tem works which the papacy had set up, and to purify the tem works which the papacy had set up, and to purify the tem and all the noble army of martyrs were disowned by their contemporaries; if coarse monks jeered at them, if they were covered with opprobrium; there are now thousands of Christians in the world who love them as fathers, honor them as victorious heroes of the Gospel of peace, and preserve a grateful remembrance of them in their hearts.

530 Broadway, New York,

March 1, 1879.

ROBERT CARTER & BROTHERS' NEW BOOKS.

World." 12mo
TESSA WADSWORTH'S DISCIPLINE. By JENNIE M. DRINKWATER. 12000
THE WICKET GATE. By the Rev. W. W. NEWTON, Author of "Little and Wise." 16mo
OUR LIFE-DAY. By PHILIP SAPIHR, D.D. 12mo 1.0
HYMNS OF THE NATIVITY, and Other Pieces. By Horatius Bonar, D.D. Square, gilt POINTED PAPERS for the Christian Life. By the Rev. T. L. CUYLER. 12mo
"The articles are short, and full of wholesome cautions, seasonable suggestions, a pithy, pertinent, axiomatic directions, interspersed with apt illustration and incident. It is justice a book as the Christian can take up at any time and read with profit. He will alway find in it something suited to his case. It will prove an admirable companion for both to closet and the fireside."—Episcopal Methodist.
THE SIX DAYS OF CREATION. By TAYLER LEWIS. 12mo. 1.
New Edition, at Half Price, of
*THE WORKS OF PRESIDENT EDWARDS. With a copious General Index. In 4 volumes. 8vo
"I consider Jonathan Edwards the greatest of the sons of men. He ranks with brightest luminaries of the Christian Church, not excluding any country, or any age since apostolic."—Robert Hall.

WELLS OF BACA; or, Solaces for the Christian Mourner.

By J. R. MACDUFF, D.D. Re-uniten. Galt edges So.50

Edited by Rev. R. BRAITHWAITE, M.A. With Postual. Svo . . . 2.50 LIFE AND LETTERS OF REV. W. PENUEPATHER.

balences - the heart and the hand equally influenced by Divide grace-has solding been trainite of Mr. Pennelather is invaluable. The happy combination of the devotional and the "We could not overstate our conviction, that as a model for ministerial study, this por-JESOS OF MAZARETH: Who was He? and What is He . sbisset in so striking a manner "- The Figside.

Now? By the Rev William Patton, D.D. 16mo 1.25

Morld " Comprising -THE KINGS PEOPLE. By the Author of the "Wide, Wide

KINGDOM OF JUDAIN, $1 50 Walks prom Edem . . $150 STAR out of Iacor . . 135 House of Iacor . . 135 House of Iacor Walls . . 125

"In general, they are a review of that wonderful history found in the Old Testament.

own personal history, and a never wearying delight" - Standard. of whom some are still left in New England, to whom the Bible story was as lamina as their New England country home, and the principal interlocutes, Uncle Sam, one of those men, This history, however, is struck upon a thread of pleasant conversation, the scene of which is

LECTURES ON ANCIENT PHILOSOPHY. By the Rev.

WILLIAM ARCHER BUTLER, late Professor of Morsi Philosophy in the SERMONS DOCTRINAL AND PRACTICAL. By the Rev. WILLIAM ARCHER BUTLER 2 vols. 12mo 250

the piety, the spirituality of the gospel "-N V Oburver. " Eloquent without pretence, thetorical without being florid, and glowing with the stall University of Dublin, 2 vols 12mo 50

THE TIME OF CALVIN. Now complete, 8 vols, 12mo. . . . 16 00 D'AUBIGNE'S HISTORY OF THE REFORMATION IN

D'AUGUSE'S HISTORY OF THE KEFORMATION IN THE SIX-

THENTH CENTURY, 5 tols, 1200 56 00

- " Proteid & Minch and to borney gautement and most and the and tritium a an balterials ad of men will come and go, and nations persan, but the ble-work of D Aubigné will continue te he records historic facts clearly, forcibly, and with the factnation of a romance. Cenerit ons truths of history and discerns the spurt of the actors, and with a love of the truth in his licket " About his history there is a charm found in no other works of the kind. He grasps the

INTEN-OCEOM.

١,

THEOLOGICAL LECTURES on Subjects connected with Natural Theology, Evidences of Christianity, The Canon and Inspiration of Scripture. By the late William Cunningham, D.D., Principal and Professor of Church History in the New College, Edinburgh, Scotland. 8vo $3.00 "Theological students, among them for this purpose we include all who thoughtfully and patiently study the word of God, will find a volume of lectures by the late Rev. Dr. Win. Cunningham, of Edinburgh, of great value. He was one of the great divinity scholars of Scotland, a giant in thought, devout, logical, learned, and full of reverence for the truth. His lectures to the students of New College embody the results of his profound study and long experience, and will be prized as among the most valuable contributions of the age to religious literature." — N. Y. Observer.
JOHN WHOM JESUS LOVED. By the Rev. JAMES CUL- ROSS, D.D. 12mo
COWPER'S TASK. With 60 superb Illustrations, from Designs by BIRKET FOSTER. Printed on fine tinted paper, and elegantly bound in cloth, gilt
THE WIDOW'S TRUST. By Mrs. MARTHA T. GALE. (Little Classic size)
OUTLINES OF THEOLOGY. By the Rev. A. ALEX. HODGE, D.D., of Princeton, N.J. New edition, rewritten and enlarged. 8vo 3.00 "The style of the author is clear, compact, and nervous, condensing the greatest amount of matter into the smallest amount of words, and his knowledge of the whole subject is so accurate that he is able to give this condensation in its best form. One valuable feature of the work is its fulness of Scripture reference and of criticism, making it a repertory of the ripest results of modern investigation as well as of ancient faith."—Central Presbyterian.
ROSE DUNBAR'S MISTAKE. By Mrs. Dodds (a daughter of Dr. Bonar)
THE SPRINGDALE SERIES. 6 vols. In a box. Each with a colored frontispiece and colored picture on the cover
MARGERY'S SON. By EMILY SARAH HOLT. 12mo 1.50
EVENTIDE AT BETHEL. By the Rev. J. R. MACDUFF, D.D.

MACDUFF, D D With 16 full page Musications. Chesp Edition . . . $2 00 BRICHTER THAN THE SUN. A Late of our Lord, by J. R.

. . It is a capital book for readers of any age." - Christian Intelligences. betrone and places have a predicteduceses which grace a rate attraction to the national " The style is exceedingly clear, ample, duect, - s'most personal, - his descriptions of пине г Регелугетыя ". Unis is a beautiful volume in all respects - thourspir, paper, binding, illustianous."

DUFF, D D All in one volume a same Red Line Edition 50 ISER, and MORNING AND MIGHT WATCHES By J. R. MAC. MIND AND WORDS OF JESUS, and FAITHFUL PROM-propriate keepsake gilt cou d be presented to a Christian friend "- S Banner. pust suited to he beside the Bible and Hyan Book on a lady's dressing table. No more sp-"The book is in the best style of the publishers, - a dainty, gilt-edged, reddined volume,

By Rev. Lewis A. Thomrsov. 12mo 1.25 THE PRAYER MEETING AND ITS IMPROVEMENT.

THE KING IN HIS BEAUTY. By the Rev. RICHARD NEW-

" The Ling in his Beauty ' is sure to be a great favorite with children, and, if any of the through - Christian at 150rd elders take it up, we will venture to predict that they will not lay it down till they have read it

By the Same Author.

. xod tasn a nil 2101 0 THE JEWEL CASE, Containing - of L · · · · · · · · · · xog poru v uf sfor g They Wovders . . : 35 | They and Wonders . 1:35 | They are Wonders . 1:35 | Leaves from Tree of Life is 5 | Girnis and Wonders . 1:35 | Leaves from Tree of Life is 5 | Girnis and Wonders . 1:35 | Circuit and Wonders . 1 THE WONDER CASE, Containing -

TILLIE VND MISE. By Rev W. W. WEWTON 125 BAYS FROM THE SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS . . . 1.25

generation are so much indebted as Dr Richard Mewton ? - N N. Observer. coury important instruction. We can think of no living writer to whom the children of the "They belong to the rare class of writings which entertain the youthful readed, and yet

* Valuable to ministers and subbath-school seachers  - Interior. " Mothers will find them a great help " -- Union Teacher

Another Reduction in the Price of "HENRY'S COMMENTARY. 5 vols., quarto, bound in cloth. $15.00 The same, bound in sheep
"Luscious as a honeycomb with sweetness drawn from God's word." — Rev. Dr. Cuyler. "His book is a 'bundle of myrrh,' and will be specially enjoyed by those who are it trouble." — Rev. Dr. IV. M. Taylor. "I doubt not that to many of God's smitten ones it will prove like the healing tree that sweetened the waters of Marah." — Rev. Dr. Bullions.
The Fifth Edition of
ALL ABOUT JESUS. By the Rev. ALEX. Dickson, D.D.
CHRISTIAN THEOLOGY FOR THE PEOPLE. By WILLIS LORD, D.D. New and cheaper edition, small Svo 2.5 "We know of no work which is more capable than this of conducting the ordinary reads to the centre of the theological system, and setting before him in clear and orderly array the related truths which enter into it."—Congregationalist.
Miss L. T. Meade's Books.
SCAMP AND I. 12mo 1.25 DAVID'S LITTLE LAD. 12mo 1.25 A KNIGHT OF TO-DAY. 12mo 1.50 WAFER GIPSIES 1.00 BEL-MARJORY 1.50 YOUR BROTHER AND MINE 1.00 New Editions

ESSAYS AND REVIEWS. By the late Dr. CHARLES HODGE 2.
McGHEE'S LECTURES ON EPHESIANS. 8vo 3.4 MURDOCK'S TRANSLATION OF THE SYRIAC NEW TESTAMENT
BROWN ON THE SECOND ADVENT
HELP HEAVENWARD. By Winslow. Neat edition. Square o.
SHORT PAPERS FOR FAMILY READING. By HAMILTON, STANLEY, EADIE, PUNSION, BINNEY, and MACDUFF. Red Line Edition o.

NEM BOOKS LOB KORNE BEOBLE

SABBATH SCHOOL LIBRARIES, CKY

ALL PUBLISHED SINCE JAN 1, 1874

oS

ς ₁

54 1

os z

00 I Hote

٥S

00

Lattle and Wase Action Lalies or Thistledown, Mathews Holt Lettice Eden Knight of To-day 11 ca 16 Ladie Exeto Litto of 5101 5 VARIABLE KING 2 SEOSTE Ashut to mobyman AVarner Mewton King in His Beauty une pue fary Madiella notted malasured to tnamgant Jack O Lantern serrors netbal VFOE Holl nagom1 Hundred Fold, Varner House in the Glen Home Lessons on Old Paths His Grandchild ower STOA 9 HIGHLAND SERIES sto $ ACTA HEROES OF ISRAEL शहरहार Hero in the Battle of Lile A LOIG Hebrew Merces Y POE Hannted Rooms Mathevs. 6 tols HAPS AND MISHAPS oregree a tree Gosbel and its Frants W lean Marner smicht nebied Macduff tesand nabled Golden Flance A L. O E. Colden Chain The Marsh 5000 A Golden Apples Gold Thread and Wee Davie Granchbe a Home Plathews Grants and Wonderful Things Giant Killer and Sequel From the Plow to the Pulpit Logga, a ritite Brother

00 Z Macduff Footsteps of St Peter poo 00 1 Sher Flowers of the Forest ζ, 1 Floss Silverthorn. G berne Szı Flag of Truce Warner FIEhting the Foe o5 1 54 Fairy Frisket A L O E 52 1 Elste a Santa Claus Maine vs ¢ε ι Ella s Half Sovereign $2 1 ewatheid Eleanor a Visit 54 Eden in England A L O E Szı Doors Outward Sz 1 presta David a Little Lad 05 5 ZEHIER MUTTOUR CAOIS THORN OU OF SHAU Szt Anothe orenies o5 1 CITE VAPLA 21014 Christia a Gld Organ Walton ton slov 50 00 LIBRARY E ON *CARTERS CHEAPS S Captivity of Judah 1 52 Rtoken Walls Warner Broken Mallet Szı ALBERT C 15 00 Z Brighter than the Sun gaporig Sz I Brentford Parsonage Sr 1 MainerBread and Uranges Se t Blackberry Jam V13t1 6 #8 ςε t snav. Bipic Ecuosa Between the Cliffs Alars all 00 I Arnot Rev Wm. Autobog 00 Z oS t Among the Turks Hamin 52 1 Airce Meville and Riversdale SION CP 00 015 ouigi

A L O E LIBRARY

Trata & Victory A L. O IL.

Fred and Jeante Drink aler

Lt me Emptre

Porty Years in the Turkish

Font Years in Ashantee

For the Master s Sale

